NO. 198—SIXTY-NINTH YEAR | VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA, SUNDAY, JULY 31, 1927 | FORTY-FOUR PAGES

QUEBEC GIVES PRINCE TREMENDOUS RECEPTION

Sir Henry Thornton Gives Pledge That C.N.R. Will Back Grain Elevator Here

President of National Lines Gives Assurance That Organization of Which He Is Head May Be Relied Upon to Join Hands With City in Making Terminal Enterprise a Success

Passage of By-Law, He Says, Should Mean Turning Point in City Progress

A MESSAGE under date of July 25 has been received in the city from Sir Henry Thornton, president of the Canadian National Railways, which in no uncertain way evidences the deep interest that he is taking in the movement to secure a grain elevator for this port. He gives the assurance that he is ready and anxious to join hands with the City of Victoria in making the project a success upon the passing of the By-Law that is to be voted upon on Thursday.

The president of the C.N.R. gives the information that not only is he personally interested in seeing the project to a success, but he also couples with this his official relation with the railway and assures the city of his interest from that standpoint.

With the other communications that have been received on the subject from the head of the railway company, there is an absolute linking of the C.N.R. with the move now made to create Victoria into an ocean grain port.

Sir Henry's message is self explanatory. It reads as follows:

"I earnestly trust that favorable action will be taken by the citizens of Victoria in connection with the by-law relating to the new elevator. Favorable action should certainly mean the turning point in the progress of your city. You may rest assured that in this and in all things relating to your civic progress I take a deep personal and official interest, and the Canadian National Railways may be relied upon to join hands with you in assisting to make the project a success.

"Vancouver Island possesses many important natural resources which can only be developed commercially if proper facilities are provided. I expect to be in Victoria shortly and will at that time be glad to meet with you and contribute anything I can towards the attainment of your aspirations.—H. W. Thornton."

MRS. KENNEDY TIES UP ANGELUS TEMPLE CASH

LOS ANGELES, July 30.—Aimee Semple McPherson today admitted that money underlies the dispute between the evangelist and her mother, Mrs. Minnie Kennedy. She claimed her mother, executive director of the seat of the Four Square Gospel, Angelus Temple, has tied up all the temple bank accounts. "I have kept it quiet," the evangelist said, "but we cannot draw a cent from any of the accounts." The committee wired me the truth of the situation while I was on my tour. They attempted to take over the collections and I started a new account in a small branch bank to meet the situation until I arrived. But because mother was the executive head of the organization, the account in the name of the temple could not be touched without her signature."

Fires Menacing

SAN FRANCISCO, July 30.—Forest fires which started by lightning and have spread during the last two days through the forest preserves from Northern California to Crater Lake, Ore., were reported under control tonight, but still in a menacing stage unless extinguished by heavy rains.

Labor Council Is Making Appeal to Vote for Elevator

AN appeal is being made by the executive of the Victoria and District Trades and Labor Council to the workingmen and working women of the city to exercise their votes and use their influence to secure the passage of the elevator by-law on Thursday next. The message reads as follows:

"We favor the Grain Elevator By-Law because the establishment of a grain elevator will strongly tend to eradicate the one deep-seated, chronic curse of life in Victoria—the difficulty of securing a livelihood. This difficulty has broken family ties, nullified educational expenditures and thwarted all attempts to improve working conditions. With a revival of industrial activity, unemployment will be relieved, wages will rise and there will be a better standard of life for the masses. Nature has bountifully endowed Vancouver Island in general and Victoria in particular, yet hitherto there has been something lacking in our stewardship. We appeal to workingmen and women to rally to the support of a movement designed to eliminate the errors of the past and to inaugurate a brighter and happier future. Do not fail to record your vote next Thursday in favor of the Grain Elevator By-Law.

"EXECUTIVE OF VICTORIA AND DSTRICT TRADES AND LABOR COUNCIL.

"per S. Howard, President."

NEW HOPE FELT AT CONFERENCE

Proposals Come From Both Britain and U.S. Designed to Bring Geneva Naval Discussion to an Agreement

IN ANY EVENT END WILL BE AMICABLE

GENEVA, July 30.—Viscount Cecil of Chelwood, intimated tonight to the United Press that Britain had made new proposals to the United States in an effort to find a basis for compromise among the participants in President Coolidge's naval limitations conference. Lord Cecil would not intimate the nature of any alteration in the British viewpoint, but seemed hopeful for something better than failure to result from the discussions here.

By HENRY WOOD.

GENEVA, July 30.—Upon the reception given a political clause proposed by the Americans to be embodied in any naval limitations agreement reached here, seemed to depend tonight the degree of success or the failure of President Coolidge's conference. The delegates have been in almost fruitless session for a month. The idea of the political clause originated with Allen W. Dulles, a member of the American delegation. It has the hearty endorsement of Viscount Cecil of Chelwood, and was understood to have been approved by Secretary of State Frank B. Kellogg. It was believed the proposal had slightly altered the situation here, and there was a possibility that the conference funeral services expected Monday would not take place on that day. The plenary conference scheduled for Monday, at which the conference was expected to collapse, may be set for later in the week. The Americans officially presented the clause for British consideration.

THE PROPOSAL

In brief, the clause would permit any signatory of an agreement if such be reached here to nullify the agreement if the signatory thought security dictated such nullification. It would be an emergency instrument, like the rip cord on a balloon. If the agreement here, should there be one, failed to work satisfactorily or if other factors made naval limitation dangerous

MR. FORD NOT ALARMED BY GIANT RIVAL

Reference Made to Reported League of U.S. Steel and General Motors in Birthday Interview

ROOM FOR RIVALS SAYS CAR-BUILDER

Market for Cars Nowhere Near Exhausted — Though 64 Years of Age New Enterprise Is Underway

DETROIT, Mich., July 30.—Mr. Henry Ford today passed the sixty-fourth milestone in a life which has been crammed with activity, and announced that he had much yet to accomplish. At an age when most men who have achieved success are beginning to think of retiring, Ford was planning one of his biggest jobs, the production of a new automobile—his first really new model since the famous model T, was introduced nineteen years ago. A complete description of the new motor car is to be announced, he said, "within a few weeks." The price he said, "Will be as big a surprise as the car itself," Mr. Ford had little to say about the impending "Battle of the Giants"—The Ford Motor Company on one hand and General Motors on the other in league with Duponts and United States Steel Corporation, although financial leaders the world over are looking forward to this conflict between the two great business interests with no end of interest.

"We have no desire," Mr. Ford said, "to take business away from any automobile manufacturer. Our thought always has been that the automobile business is prosperous only when all the makers of good cars are busy. If any particular automobile company's success meant putting out of business some other automible manufacturer, there would be no gain. It would only mean putting thousands of men out of work, letting valuable power go to waste, and maybe throwing a great industry out of balance."

TWO BILLIONS FOR WAGES

"We built fifteen million model "T" cars in the last nineteen years," he said, "and we expect to build many more than 15,000,000 of the new cars in much less than nineteen years." The field for the sale of motor cars has nowhere nearly been exhausted, he indicated, mentioning the fact that in many quarters of the world there are still entire families who have never seen an automobile. Mr. Ford revealed a maze of figures which seemed to confirm estimates of his tremendous wealth. They included: Wages to employees over a nineteen year period, $1,970,414,172; expenditures for material during the same period $4,866,427,012; taxes for the period $547,000,000.

BRITISH LABOR CONGRESS AT EDINBURGH EXPECTED TO BREAK WITH SOVIET

Moscow Visualizes New Imperialism and Dictatorship, Says Labor Member

LONDON, July 30.—The decision of the General Trades Union Congress to refer the question of Anglo-Russian Labor Party relations to the September Congress at Edinburgh, is expected in well-informed circles to result in a break between British labor and Moscow. If, and when, the break comes it will be due, Labor leaders say, almost wholly to the opening of British eyes to Bolshevik perils through the absurd blunders and senseless bullying tactics of Soviet spokesmen. The view of the Trades Union Council is expressed by a member of Parliament who is also a member of the Congress, as follows:

"Some of the Council," he said, "are reluctant to declare or create a break with Russia, but a definite break is better than alliance or pretence. You can safely assume the break is coming soon. We recognize it is impossible to mix oil and water, and just as impossible to blend British ideas and Soviet methods. It was only a friendly desire to act as intermediatry between the International Federation of Trades Unions and Moscow that brought the British movement under the lashing criticism of the Soviet spokesman, and the recent policy of Moscow has revealed that friendly intervention was not what Moscow wanted.

"It becomes clearer every day that the Soviet visualizes a new imperialism, a dictatorship over the destinies of the British Empire by first alienating the working class from constitutional ideals."

Chancellor of Germany Encourages Austrians

Who has severed association with Republican organization which two years ago placed him in nomination for the German presidency in opposition to General Von Hindenburg. CATHEDRAL STIRS LONDON INTEREST

Plan to Erect Western Tower as Memorial to Bishop of London's Tour Has Been Announced

MOVE IS APPROVED IN LONDON TIMES

One of the western towers of the new Christ Church Cathedral will be known as the Bishop Winnington-Ingram Tower, as a permanent memorial of the recent world tour of the Bishop of London, if present plans of the British Columbia and Yukon Church Aid Society in England are carried out. This decision follows an inquiry by cable from England, and the sanction of the proposal by the Bishop of Columbia, who authorized the announcement last night.

A statement of the proposal appeared in a recent issue of The London Times, over the signatures of Lord Clarendon, former Under-Secretary of State for the Dominions; the Bishop of Willesden, formerly Bishop of Columbia; Dr. Jocelyn Perkins, general secretary of the B.C. and Yukon Church Aid Society; Mr. F. A. Pauline, Agent-General for British Columbia, and others. The proposal, it was stated, has the warm approval of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

HAS INSPIRED EFFECT

This indication of practical support in the building of Victoria's new Cathedral from the Mother Country has given the Cathedral authorities here cause for renewed hope that it will be possible to secure locally the necessary additional funds to complete the nave and west front within the present contract, and so permit the desire of the English society for the erection of a memorial tower to be carried out at a reasonably early date.

It is probable that the northwest tower will be built as the Bishop Winnington-Ingram Tower, and the desire to name it after the bishop who laid the foundation stone follows, it is stated, a very old precedent in the Church, and one adopted in a number of English cathedrals.

The statement in The London Times made the following reference to the significance of the building now in course of construction:

MAYOR HANDS OVER KEY TO MANAGER

(Colonist Staff Representative)

NANAIMO, July 30.—The Canadian Pacific Railway's support of measures looking to the development of Nanaimo and of the tourist trade of the Island generally, was promised by Mr. C. E. Stockdill, assistant to the vice-president in charge of Western lines, and by Captain J. W. Troup, manager of the British Columbia Coast Steamship Service, at the opening dinner here tonight at the Hotel Malaspina. This hotel, a community effort, to whose financing the C.P.R. has loaned a large sum on very favorable terms, was declared open by Mayor Busby, who handed the key to the manager, Mr. J. A. Weldon.

Tracing the history of the development of the business of transportation between Vancouver and Nanaimo, Captain Troup declared amid applause that the confidence shown when the Princess Patricia was purchased and brought out on the route in May, 1921, had been more than justified by

FOREST FIRES UNDER CONTROL

VANCOUVER FORESTRY DISTRICT OFFICIALS REPORTS SITUATION WELL IN HAND

All Outbreaks Extinguished or Under Control Except That Inland From Squamish

VANCOUVER, July 30.—With an exception of an outbreak inland from Squamish on the Elabu River, all fires in the Vancouver forestry district are under control or have been extinguished, it is reported. A ranger has left Squamish to investigate the Elabu River blaze, and W. R. Flummerfelt, assistant forester, left Vancouver in a Canadian Air Force seaplane from Jericho Beach at 10:30 a.m. to conduct a reconnaissance of the locality from the air.

Several day's fine warm weather is forecast for Vancouver and vicinity. The humidity condition is high.

No damage was caused by the sixty-acre fire in slash at Evans Bay, Reid Island, which broke out on Friday. The outbreak has been brought under control.

CONFINED TO SLASHINGS

Two fire covering in all about sixty acres, on the logging operations of Bloedel, Stewart & Welch, at Menzies Bay, have been extinguished. They burned through slashing.

A fire covering nearly sixty acres started at noon Friday on the logging operations of Robert Dollar Company at Deep Bay. It was confined to slash, and has been brought under control. A twenty-acre fire at Horne Lake, Vancouver Island, on the workings of Thompson & Clarke, is smouldering.

Heir to Britain's Throne And Prime Minister Speak To Applauding Audiences

Prince of Wales Recalls Wonderful and Pleasant Days of Former Visit — Mr. Baldwin Speaks of Union in Canada of Two Great Civilizations of Europe and Its Future

British Statesmanship Proves Equal To Problem of Nations in One Empire

QUEBEC, Que., July 30.—The Prince of Wales at today's welcoming ceremonies, replying to the greetings of Premier Taschereau of Quebec, said: "I thank you all very heartily for the way you have drunk the last toast with a kindness which sets the seal on the friendly welcome back to Canada that I have experienced since I landed.

"Last January I had the pleasure of attending the Wolfe bi-centennary dinner—one of the many and varied occasions which, from time to time during my life in London, serve to bridge the Atlantic for me and bring me into direct touch with the Dominion which, I hope I may say, I am beginning to know so well.

"I said then that to everybody, when from the deck of this steamer he watches the heights grow nearer, must always come a moment of reflection on the great battle that was fought there 148 years ago and the two great generals who fell in it, and I remember going on to say that they and those who died with them were singularly fortunate in having as their perpetual memorial the great United Kingdom of Canada, whose foundations were laid on the battlefields of Quebec.

"To me, however, that inevitable recollection is only one of many which now come when I approach Quebec. I found as the Empress of Australia steamed up the St. Lawrence I had such a store of recollections that I had not half got to the bottom of them before the voyage was finally over; recollections of wonderful days in the open air and of pleasant Canadian gatherings all over the Dominion from coast to coast.

PRESENT VISIT

"On this particular occasion such recollections have a special significance for me, from the fact that my present visit to Canada, which has begun so happily today, differs from three previous ones in two respects. In the first place, this is a year memorable in the history of Canada, and, therefore, of the whole Empire, the year when with gratitude for the past and with high hopes for the future, we celebrate the Diamond Jubilee of Confederation.

"Secondly, on this occasion, I do not come alone. I bring with me my younger brother who has so far only experienced Canadian hospitality in a single journey from west to east, when returning from naval service in China. As a sailor he has, like myself, done a good deal of traveling, but this time we are traveling together, and you will understand, I know, that it is a very real pleasure to me to have him with me now in Canada, where good fortune has taken me so often in recent years.

"With me, too, comes the Prime Minister of the Old Country. Mr. Baldwin has, of course, already been here in the days before he assumed his high office, so I have had to forego the

Prince of Wales Will Reach Here August Nineteen

H.R.H. the Prince of Wales will be the guest of the city of Victoria from August 19 until August 22. This information was conveyed to the Britannia Post of the Canadian Legion of the B.E.S.L. in a message received yesterday from Captain Lascelles, private secretary to His Royal Highness.

The Prince later wired the Britannia Post that he would be pleased to attend the ball to be held at the Empress Hotel between August 19 and 22. Final details of this big social event will be announced later.

Supplementing this information conveyed in the wire from the Prince, there has been received by Mr. Kenneth Ferguson, president of the Canadian Club of this city, an assurance that the Prince will be pleased to accept the invitation that was extended by that organization to him requesting him to address the club during the time of his stay in the city. The actual date of the Canadian Club luncheon will be settled later.

OPPONENTS AID ASQUITH FUND

Conservatives Among Chief Contributors to Gift of Annuity to Lord Asquith and Oxford

PLAN INITIATED BY LORD READING

By HERBERT BAILEY

LONDON, July 30.—(British United Press.)—Lord Beaverbrook has admitted his contribution to the fund for Lord Asquith and Oxford, but has used the occasion to take a slam at The Daily News. Declaring that the paper's statement that he was contributing a thousand pounds a year to the fund was made without his authorization, Lord Beaverbrook adds: "The objection of The Daily News appears to be to opponents of the Liberal party contributing funds for Lord Oxford. If this is the objection of the Cadburys and the Rowntrees, why did they not look after Lord Oxford themselves? Heaven knows he has done enough for them."

Lord Reading has issued an official statement naming the contributors to the fund, among whom are Lord Beaverbrook, with a thousand pounds, and Hon. P. C. Larkin, Canadian High Commissioner, with five hundred. Liberals like Lord Reading, H. N. Gladstone and Sir John Simon are also participating. Others are: Lord Abercomway, Sir Abe Bailey, Lord Beauchamp, Lord Cowdray, Lord Derby, Lord Davenport, Lord Inchcape, Lord Lincolnshire, Sir Alfred Mond, James De Rothschild and Lord Schuttleworth.

ALLEGED MYSTERY

LONDON, July 30.—A veil of mystery envelopes the proposals for giving Lord Oxford and Asquith an annuity of £3,500 yearly as a testimonial, because, owing to his labor for the State, he is a poor man. The retired Liberal chieftain is understood to have enjoyed a private income from Lord Cowdray, the oil magnate, but this ceased when the latter died recently.

Lord Reading, former Viceroy of India, initiated the scheme for the Asquith annuity. Recent holders of Cabinet ministers' pensions included Mr. Gerald Balfour, brother of the Earl of Balfour, but he relinquished his pension a few years ago, and John Burns, who, having declared that no man is worth more than five hundred a year, now enjoys a pension of two thousand. It is a singular fact that the chief contributors to the Asquith testimonial are Conservatives.

THEATRE SOLD TO VANCOUVER FIRM

Playhouse Brings Price of Nearly $70,000, It Is Understood—Was Built in 1895

The Playhouse Theatre, one of the oldest buildings in Victoria, was sold yesterday to Vancouver and British Columbia theatre interests, it was announced by Pemberton & Son, which firm put through the sale. The purchase of this property is the biggest real estate deal that has been put through this year. It is understood that the price paid was close to $70,000.

Built in 1895 by the Ancient Order of United Workmen as club headquarters, it was later used for a theatre and ballroom. Later still it fell into use as a music hall, but was converted at the advent of motion pictures into a theatre again, being used both for motion pictures and the legitimate stage.

In the early days of Victoria it played an important part in the social life of the city. Amateur operatics were produced there, then stock companies used the hall for their productions. Mr. Reginald Hincks made his debut in opera productions at this theatre and has been associated with it for the last thirty years, and is at present producing pot-pourri opera there in conjunction with the screening of motion pictures.

The building was sold to Toronto interests in 1912 and was considerably improved by the buyers for stock company use. It is understood that the Vancouver interests will carry out extensive improvements to the building.

The sale of the property at the price it brought is another indication of the increasing importance and value of property situated on Yates Street, particularly in this section, which has become known as the theatre district and automobile row.

Vote in Favor of the Grain Elevator By-Law Next Thursday and Make Victoria a Permanent Grain Port

Mr. A. J. Watson, Manager of the Hudson's Bay Company's Victoria Store, Says:

"I am in favor of the Grain Elevator By-Law for several reasons:

"1st—I consider it the most important question that the Electorate have been asked to decide during the past twenty-five years and a favorable vote will have a far reaching and beneficial effect upon Victoria's future prosperity.

"2nd—A favorable answer on the part of the voters will definitely link the Canadian National Railway with our Port development and bring into active use the great investment represented in the Ogden Point Docks.

"3rd—The long established and highly regarded Dominion Bank have interested themselves in the credit arrangements, and promised their sympathetic co-operation in establishing Victoria as a Grain Port.

"4th—The fact that the City of Victoria through the Mayor and Council have secured an agreement with the Panama Pacific Grain Terminals, Ltd., that affords the City full protection against all contingencies.

"5th—Because the time has arrived when Victoria must assert herself, and prove that while she has the finest climate in the Dominion and can provide some of the finest hunting, fishing and scenery that is to be found anywhere, she must also be prepared to show the world that her opportunities industrially, are as bright as any city in Canada, and intends to enjoy to the fullest possible extent the great development that is bound to take place on the Pacific during the next decade."

PRINCE RUPERT, July 30.—Stewart Edward White, author, and Robert Pinkerton, of San Francisco, are here after a cruise to Alaska on their yachts Simba and Triton. Mr. White says that from the standpoint of weather and general interest the sail has been the best of his experience. From here they will visit Gardner Canal, and will probably be another month in Northern British Columbia waters.

PORTLAND'S WATER SUPPLY THEATENED

SANDY, Ore., July 30.—A forest fire threatening the entire watershed of Bull Run Lake, the source of Portland's water supply, was being fought tonight at Bear Creek dam, on the Bull Run reserve, by a force of 350 men. Every available man employed on the Bear Creek project was thrown on to the fire line, and men were hurried from Sandy to assist in keeping the flames from roaring into the dense timber of the watershed.

Mrs. Newlywed was very much distressed. Her husband had caught a bad cold, and fearing the 'flu, his wife decided to take his temperature. This she found to be rather dangerous and so she phoned the doctor.

"Hallo, doctor!" she said. "Could you come and see my husband at once. His temperature frightens me."

"What is the temperature?" asked the medical man.

"One hundred and thirty-eight," returned the woman.

"Well, I am sorry," answered the other, "but the case is beyond my skill; you'de better send for the fire brigade."

EARLY ELECTION EXPECTED IN B.C.

Provincial Executive of Conservative Party Deals With Federal and Local Situation

VANCOUVER, July 30.—Members of the executive of the British Columbia Conservative Association held a meeting in the city this morning to discuss plans for sending delegates to the Dominion Conservative convention at Winnipeg in October.

The Provincial political situation was also discussed and consideration given to perfecting organization in preparation for a general election, which the executive thinks cannot be long delayed.

Each Federal riding in the Province will have the opportunity of sending four delegates to the Dominion convention, it was decided. In addition there will be fourteen delegates at large, representing one for every Federal seat.

Members of Parliament, defeated Conservative candidates, privy councillors and Senators will also have a vote in the convention, it was said.

Conservative associations throughout the Province will be notified by the executive of the procedure for selection of delegates.

HEIR TO BRITAIN'S THRONE AND PRIME MINISTER SPEAK TO LARGE AUDIENCE

temptation of treating him, on the way over, as a tenderfoot; but I have this advantage of him—that he has, I believe, never been out West, though I shall lose even that in a few days' time. Nonetheless, I have found his knowledge of Canada generally, and all things Canadian, quite thorough; though I like to look on myself as almost an old-timer, I believe that Mr. Baldwin after his one visit will have learned as much about ranching, for instance, as I have learned in three.

SPEAKING AS CANADIAN

"To Mrs. Baldwin, however, the Dominion is new territory, and if I might for the moment speak as a Canadian I should like to bid her and her family a true welcome to this land where people speak the word welcome from the heart and do not say 'goodby,' but, 'come again,'—and mean it.

"For myself, when I get back to Canada I have only one regret, and that is for the number of times I have to say no to those who are kind enough to send me invitations from every province and from all quarters of the Dominion. I make it a rule in life to make each 24 hours go as far as possible and to see as much of the world as opportunity offers; but even so, this principle cannot be expanded indefinitely, and it is, I am afraid, inevitable that lack of time must prevent me visiting more than a small proportion of the many localities whose representatives have been good enough to ask me to come. I can only assure them, and I do so very sincerely, that their offers of hospitality are no less valued by me than their hospitality itself would be if time permitted me to accept it. But I am very glad indeed that it is going to be possible for me to cross the Rockies once more and to spend a few days on the Pacific Coast.

"Once more, sir, I thank you and all in Quebec most sincerely for the welcome which has been given to my brother and myself today."

PREMIER BALDWIN

July 30.—Premier Baldwin, replying to the toast of his health proposed by Hon. Mr. Mercier, Minister of Lands in the Quebec Government, at today's ceremonies, dealt with the reference to himself by the Prince of Wales.

"Your Royal Highness," he said, "was very generous in your allusion to me in your speech. I am proud to have your support, sir, on this historic occasion today. None of us in public life can compare in experience or knowledge of the Empire, nor I think can any Dominion statesmen, with that possessed by yourself. You are the heir to the throne, the link which unites us all. We go across the stage at the popular bidding. The royal family remains above all changes of parties, the focus of a million loyalties, the foundation of unfailing sympathy with the fortunes of the people, and above all, and through all, the faithful servant of them all. You, sir, earlier today spoke of emotions aroused in us. In Europe, we often think of the emotion of those who came from overseas to see their old homes, whether it be the Norman Church in the old English village, the gloom of Summer in Scotland, or the heather and porridge and Psalms of David. Those things, we know, stir the deepest emotions of which nature is possible.

CANADA'S INDIVIDUALITY

"But this morning we realized what the emotion was of one coming from the Old World and entering the most wonderful highway to a continent that exists in the wide world today—entering land which for the next thousand years, based as it is on the two great civilizations of Europe, will show the world what the union of those civilizations can accomplish.

"In Canada, men from England and Scotland were joined by men from France, having the religion of another branch of the Christian family and coming from a land where the feudal system had lingered longer than it had lingered in England.

"The problem was how to harmonize those elements with one another and how to harmonize them with the Old Country. The solution was found in the loyalty of the ordinary people, led by men possessing those invaluable characteristics we need today as much as ever—common sense and good will.

EMPIRE AND NATION

"Imperial policy was to equal the demands of a diversified Empire. Imperial policy might sometimes have seemed irrational. Passions had been stirred, and when passions were stirred incidents occurred, and incidents sometimes led to something more serious. But in spite of passions and incidents, tribute could be paid today to the men on whom primarily had rested the responsibility, who worked out or rather had laid the foundations of the edifice seen today."

Mr. Baldwin mentioned Premier King as he paid tribute to distinguished men both in the Old Country and in Canada. He turned to the subject of Empire and nationality.

Two languages, two real cultures, two great branches of the Christian religion, the qualities of two races, had gone to build up the civilization of Canada.

There was no desire in any part of the British Empire today to thwart the cultural aspirations of nationality in any other part of the Empire, or to try to drive the nations of the Empire, the nations of Commonwealth, into one type and one mould. It was the active power of the principle of liberty, however imperfect at times it might be interpreted, that really united us and would form the cement of Empire.

He concluded: "As Prime Minister of Great Britain, as a man, there is nothing better that I can wish for Canada as she presses forward into the future days on her triumphant way than that she may carry along with her the old-fashioned virtues and pleasures of the countryside which build up and alone built up, the greatness of France and of England."

TREMENDOUS GREETING

QUEBEC, July 30.—Two Princes and a Prime Minister came to Quebec today to a tremendous reception.

The Prince of Wales, Prince George and Stanley Baldwin, the first Prime Minister in office to visit Canada, came ashore from the steamer Empress of Australia to find Canadians eager to do them every honor. The Prince of Wales wore a serious look under his plaid Glengarry, a part of his colonel's uniform of the Seaforth Highlanders. As he left the liner to board a tug for King's wharf and the formal welcome waiting there, girls and boys in small craft about the huge three-funnelled Empress of Australia broke into cheers and he smiled brightly at them.

The Prince was very Scottish, his Seaforth Highlander uniform made it easy to identify him as he mounted the wharf among the scores of army and navy officers escorting him.

He stepped ashore in company with Premier Mackenzie King and Hon. Narcisse Perodeau, Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec, as the royal salute of twenty-one guns boomed from the citadel high above the wharf. The Twenty-second Regiment stood at attention as the regimental band played the first eight bars of "God Save the King," the Prince coming to a smart salute.

WELCOMED BY CITY

After the official introductions, Mayor Valmont Martin delivered the formal welcome of the City of Quebec to the Princes and Premier, delivering one address to the Prince of Wales and Prince George in both French and English, and then making Prime Minister Baldwin welcome in both languages.

The Prince of Wales replied briefly but heartily, speaking in French for his brother and himself, while Mr. Baldwin made his response also brief, but appreciative, in English. As the ceremonies at the wharf were concluded and the procession moved away, there was wild cheering from the people, one enthusiastic group being led by Canon Scott, a famous "padre" during the war.

The two Princes drove in open carriages to Spencerwood, official residence of the Lieutenant-Governor, to rest before a luncheon to be tendered by the Government later in the day, while Mr. Baldwin waited for the same luncheon engagement at the huge Chateau Frontenac Hotel nearby.

AFTERNOON

By Morris De Haven Tracy

QUEBEC, July 30.—Canada tonight was settling down to the pleasant duty of entertaining the Prince of Wales, Premier Stanley Baldwin and the members of their party who arrived here today aboard the Ss. Empress of Australia. The tremendous popularity of the heir to the British throne has not dimmed since last he visited Canada. He was greeted with cheers today on arrival and again whenever he appeared in public.

Assuming the role of a Canadian, the Prince brought whoops of pleasure from some 500 guests assembled at a luncheon this afternoon when he welcomed Mrs. Baldwin to Canada. The Premier, he explained, had visited the Dominion before, but Mrs. Baldwin was on her first visit. Prince George was the fourth member of the party which comprises as distinguished a group of visitors as this venerable old French city ever has entertained.

The Prince landed beneath the old citadel this morning, and this afternoon appearing before some 500 of the flower of the community he won the hearts of this Province, probably the only French-speaking territory under the British flag.

or otherwise distasteful to one of the signatories, the rip cord would be pulled and down would come the agreement, deflated.

In operation, the clause would not seem so simple as that. It was understood that the procedure would be for the menaced or otherwise affected nation to summon a tri-partite conference if such naval limitation seemed unwise. If at the conference no agreement could be reached relative to what should be done, all three signatories would be released from the agreement. Conditions would revert to those prevailing before President Coolidge invited the present conference.

There seemed no justification tonight for much optimism. The best that could be said for the situation was that the final showdown must be proposed, and while there is time there will remain some hope.

By PAUL R. MALLON.

RAPID CITY, S.D., July 30.—President Coolidge took steps today to prevent the threatened rupture at the Geneva Disarment meeting from resulting in any international hard feelings. Mr. Coolidge is convinced the conference will fail when the delegates of this Government, Great Britain and Japan assemble Monday for what may be the final plenary session. But he wants the meeting to fail as gracefully as possible. Mr. Hugh Gibson, head of the American delegation, is to be instructed before Monday that this Government can never assent to Great Britain's proposal for amplifying her present naval strength to the extent she desires, but that this Government realizes the British necessity for protecting her far-flung provinces. Mr. Gibson may present these sentiments at Geneva on Monday, but that matter is to be left to his own discretion.

A UNIQUE APPEAL

"The future Cathedral of Victoria, standing upon the Western verge of the British Empire, possesses a romance and an appeal which are not only telling, but also unique. It is the precise counterpart, in the Far West, of Liverpool Cathedral here in the Old Country. It has a spiritual message to give unlike any other of the great high temples of Christendom. It stands amid matchless scenery, in full view of the snow-capped Olympic Mountains. Its towers, visible far out at sea, will be the first thing upon which the eye of the traveler across the Pacific from Australia, New Zealand and the Far East will rest. It is no exaggeration to say that Victoria Cathedral has a meaning and a message not for British Columbia, nor even for Canada alone, but for the whole British Empire.

PLANS DRAWN LONG AGO

"Thirty years ago and more plans were drawn up which have received the highest commendation from some of the leading architects in England and America. In size, when complete, Victoria Cathedral will rank with such buildings as Chester and Rochester, and on its lofty site will present a truly majestic appearance. Professor Lethaby, surveyor of Westminster Abbey, has not hesitated to style it "an excellent scheme, reasonable, not extravagant, but dignified." Sir Charles Gilbert Scott, the architect of Liverpool Cathedral, describes is as "a scholarly piece of work," while Mr. Walter Tapper, architect to the Dean and Chapter of York, states that it "upholds the fine traditions of the architecture of past ages, and at the same time possesses those modern requirements which are necessary.

"Many delays have unfortunately supervened, not at least the terrible setback of the war. Now, at last, a start has been made, and the foundation stone of the nave was laid in September last by the Bishop of London."

The regular meeting of the British Columbia Provincial Rabbit Breeders' Association will be held at 8 p.m. on Tuesday, in the Y.M.C.A. Building.

Only Powerful Medicine Will End RHEUMATISM

It matters not whether you have had agonizing pains from rheumatism for twenty years, or distressing twitchings for twenty weeks. Rheuma, while harmless, is strong enough and mighty and powerful enough to drive the rheumatic poisons from your system and abolish all misery or money back.

Vancouver Drug Co. and all druggists sell Rheuma with guarantee of perfect satisfaction or money refunded. A large bottle is inexpensive, and after you take the small dose as directed twice a day for just a few days you should know that at last you have obtained a remedy that does relieve your suffering and will conquer rheumatism.

For over fifteen years Rheuma has been sold and recommended by the best druggists in America. It has released thousands from agony, pain and despair and should do the same for you. (Advt.)

Yip Sang Buried

VANCOUVER, July 30.—Yip Sang, pioneer Chinese resident, Pender Street, was buried today. Hundreds of Chinese from Vancouver, Seattle, and as far away as Portland, attended the service. Interment was in Mountain View Cemetery. For many years Yip Sang was passenger agent here for the C.P.R. in connection with their Hong Kong trade. Several of Sang's sons are graduates of Canadian universities. A large family, most of whom reside in Vancouver, survive Sang.

Many white citizens attended the last rites, read both in the English and Chinese tongues.

PRESENTATION TO MISS G. ALLEN

Jubilee Hospital Training School for Nurses Shows Appreciation of Former Instructor

The Jubilee Hospital Training School for Nurses on Friday evening made a presentation to Miss Gregory Allen, instructor of nurses, recently resigned after more than seven years' association with the hospital.

The presentation took the form of the senior class pin, mounted on a gold signet ring. This was accompanied by an expression of admiration, and appreciation of Miss Allen's work as a teacher as well as in her personal relations with the students. A box of roses and sweet peas was given at the same time.

Miss Gregory Allen received her appointment to the Jubilee Hospital Training School staff in January, 1920. A Canadian, and educated in this country, she received her training in New York Hospital New York City, but enlisted for overseas service in Victoria, leaving here with the reinforcement for No. 9 Stationary Hospital and Casualty Clearing Hospital, France. She was in hospitals on the Western front for the greater part of the period of her service overseas and came back here shortly after her discharge.

C.E.F. VETERAN HIGHLY PRAISES HUSKY TREATMENT

Victoria Man Tells How This Preparation Relieves Stomach Trouble — Helping Him More Than Anything.

That Husky, the herb preparation, distributed by the MacFarlane Drug Co., is indeed a true friend to the suffering men and women of this city as in hundreds of cases it does that which it is intended to do—to relieve stomach, liver, kidney and bowel ailments and their accompanying ills. Mr. George A. Peters, of 3261 Rutledge Street, a veteran of the C.E.F., is one of the hundreds of sufferers here to benefit from the Husky treatment and he tells of his experience as follows: "I want to say that through the use of Husky I have been greatly relieved of severe stomach trouble, which I contracted while serving overseas with the C.E.F. Husky has done away with gas on the stomach and bowels, which caused me much suffering. Before I started the Husky treatment my stomach was always upset and improper assimilation of my food kept me weak.

"I was in a bad condition in general when I began Husky. This fine medicine has not only relieved my stomach trouble, gas and indigestion, but has toned up my whole system. It is helping me much more than anything I ever tried before. I am recommending Husky to my friends and will recommend it to anyone suffering from troubles similar to mine."

MacFarlane's Headquarters

The MacFarlane Drug Co. is exclusive headquarters for Husky in Victoria. Call at this store and let the Husky expert explain how the best and quickest results may be obtained from the Husky treatment. (Advt.)

Famous Mine Closes

LONDON, July 30. — The famous Mount Morgan gold and copper mine in Queensland has been permanently closed, says a Melbourne, Australia, dispatch to The Daily Express and £15,000,000 ($75,000,000) worth of ore it is estimated to contain was abandoned. It is stated that the directors and shareholders decided it was impossible to work the mine profitably owing to labor conditions.

THE ELEVATOR BY-LAW

We do not think the opposition to the Grain Elevator By-law need be considered as very serious even if it be considered as quite sincere. It is easy to understand the position of the few persons who opposed the adoption of the first two by-laws submitted to the voters for their approval. It is not quite so easy to understand the position of the persons who were enthusiastic advocates of the cold storage and the moving picture schemes and are bitter opponents of the grain elevator enterprise. We do not say the critics of the grain elevator scheme are insincere in their opposition. We do maintain that their position is peculiar and hard to understand.

For we believe, and our belief is supported by the opinion of high authorities, that of the three by-laws the one that is to be voted upon on Thursday next is the most worthy of support, because the immediate and ultimate benefits that will be derived by the city from the construction of an elevator will be of a solid and permanent character.

Victoria is already one of the great shipping centres of the world. But Victoria is not a great transportation centre. Many ships call at Victoria during the course of a year. Those ships do not discharge many cargoes at Victoria. If Victoria were as great a transportation port as she is a shipping port she would be a populous and opulent city.

The idea at the back of the elevator scheme is not merely the erection and operation of a single grain elevator. The conviction of the supporters of the elevator enterprise is that if the by-law be endorsed the first step will have been taken to make Victoria a transportation centre and business centre, based upon her unique advantages as a shipping port.

We believe the ratepayers of Victoria did well in endorsing the two by-laws first submitted to them for approval. We sincerely believe the ratepayers of Victoria will do even better if they heartily endorse the elevator by-law which will be placed before them on Thursday next.

EMPLOYING CANADIANS

Attention has been drawn to a matter of development in Canadian industry, or rather to a want thereof, which suggests a reason why our young men so often cross into the United States to seek a livelihood. The development of pulpwood industries in the Province of Quebec, and the larger number of people finding employment in that Province because of the many mills, indicate just what could be done in Canada as a whole were more attention given to home manufacture and not so much to exportation of raw material.

A very great deal has been written and said concerning the many of our fine young men who have gone to the United States looking for work. Many suggestions have been offered and many recommendations made with a view to checking this exodus of Canada's young manhood. It has been rightfully stated that these young men are being educated in Canada and then turned over to the United States, and that our neighbors are getting the benefit to the detriment of ourselves. Numbers of thoughtful people do not see the matter in this light at all. They say that if Canada cannot take care of these young men, then we ought to be grateful to the United States that it gives to them the opportunity they seek, namely, a chance to make use of the education they have received, or, in other words, a chance to make good. Just so far as we Canadians are dilatory or alert in expanding our industries and so making opportunities for our aspiring youth, will the exodus of our youth be stimulated or retarded. This appears to be a basic fact which cannot too often be stressed. For instance, if there is money in the manufacture of asbestos and nickel articles, then we should get into the business without delay and give added employment to our people.

Some day, possibly in the near future, there will be greater demand in Canada for young men, well educated and otherwise highly trained, for the business world. When that time comes we will have a supply to meet the demand, but until that time arrives we should not be too ready to condemn our friendly neighbor to the South because of the fact that an opportunity is afforded our school graduates and finished mechanics to make good with the tools supplied them in our educational institutions. Until such time as Canada develops sufficiently to utilise our surplus of young men it should be a matter for satisfaction that there is some place nearby they can go and be given an opportunity to make something of themselves. What Canada needs is more industries so that our vast raw resources can be manufactured in Canada, and with more people that a market will be found at home for the things manufactured. We are coming to this slowly, but none the less surely, and with careful handling the problem of our young men will find a solution and they will be able to secure employment in their own country with every chance of making good in the business of the world.

DISTINGUISHED GUESTS

It may seem superfluous in extending a welcome to the two princes of the blood and to the Prime Minister of Great Britain who have landed on the shores of Canada to express a hope that the visitors may have a good time in this country. The Prince of Wales has a jolly time wherever he goes, and he has the wonderful gift of making everyone he meets feel as jolly as he feels.

Prime Minister Baldwin will therefore enjoy himself as long as he remains in the company of the two princes. But there is an ordeal or two in store for him. He must in all civility meet the politicians and listen to what they have to say, no matter how badly they may say it. There are a multitude of people in British Columbia who would like to meet Mr. Baldwin, but none of these people will enjoy that pleasure unless they cross the great mountains in quest of it. The itinerary of the Prime Minister was fixed months ago by a committee of the Government of Canada. The committee of the Cabinet decided to convoy Mr. Baldwin as far west as Calgary, then to turn him around and take him back East. Therefore the Premier will not see a Province which is not the least of the Provinces of Canada anyway you look at it, and the people of British Columbia will be denied the pleasure of meeting a British Prime Minister who is much more than merely a politician.

We do not know whether the action of the committee of the Ottawa Cabinet was deliberate or merely a stupid blunder. We note, however, that the Acting Premier of the Province and the Mayors of some of our cities are trying to have the error corrected. We hope it is not too late.

We believe it is Mr. Tex Rickard, the renowned but impoverished impresario, who says that someone must take round the hat and ask all radio listeners-in to contribute as much as they can afford in support of the prize-fighting profession. Tex says broadcasting is affecting the attendance at his entertainments. He wants every sack containing grist to be delivered at his mill. If the big newspapers were to decide to charge all the big fight promoters at the usual advertising rate for every line of rubbish published in advance of prize fights, the profits of the promoters would not be so princely in their proportions. That is what the newspapers should do.

However valuable or however valueless discussions may be for purposes of elucidation and illumination, one thing is certain: No great nation ever will tolerate interference with or regulation of its internal affairs by any tribunal, however high-sounding a name it may bear or how many nations it may claim to represent. Whatever the result of the discussions at Geneva or anywhere else, Great Britain will build the ships that are considered essential to her in business, and the United States will do the same thing. The Naval Conference will result in no good thing. It may result in one bad thing—international irritation.

The report from China that one hundred thousand lives had been snuffed out by an earthquake may be slightly exaggerated. The place at which the quake took place is so remote from civilization that almost three months passed before news of the catastrophe was carried to the outside. Time and distance frequently distort facts.

The Summer need not be so fervently hot in its protests against the false statements circulated by the weather prophets regarding its intentions. There seem to be more deaths as the direct or the indirect results of extreme heat this year than ever before.

It was at one time customary for queens to wear extremely voluminous robes. There are pictures of queens published in the newspapers almost every day, and most of the modern queens who succeed in getting their pictures printed appear to wear practically nothing at all.

The Rhyming Optimist

By Aline Michaelis

WITCHES

It used to be, the Gypsies went with caravan and gaudy tent, and atmosphere of tinkling bells and tamborines and witch's spells. By every road, through hill and glade, those bands of care-free creatures strayed. Their worldly holdings were but small and yet contentment blessed them all, for daily as they passed they sang; by night their camps with laughter rang. Though of earth's treasures they had few, yet fields were green and skies were blue, so ever as they rode along they trilled their merry Gypsy song. We used to stare as they went through, the happy, dark-skinned Gypsy crew. But now, behold, the Gypsy clan claims all the world, each maid and man! Each toddling child and gray-beard sire now knows the Gypsy's old desire. In rusty, trusty cars they go, where skies are blue and boughs bend low.

POLICEWOMEN

Sir,—On reading the police news in this morning's Colonist, we are both impressed and pleased that, at the meeting yesterday, preventive work among girls and women was stressed. We would like to offer a slight suggestion that the new policewoman appear on duty in a suitable uniform betokening her profession, as preventive work done on stool pigeon, or, in other words, sneak lines, can never appeal to the goodness which lies buried somewhere in the heart of every offender. To wish to do preventive work is a good motive. Let the Commissioners see to it that that motive is not spoiled by stool pigeon methods of doing it.

EXPERIMENTS ON ANIMALS

Sir,—Please allow me a little of your valuable space to say a few words on this subject. The people who are against experimenting on animals seem to have got the absurd idea that cruelty is perpetrated on the animals. There is absolutely no warrant for this idea. Anyone who has studied this subject knows perfectly well that the animals are anaesthetised. They therefore suffer no pain. One person who wrote to the Press likened the doctors to the Spanish Inquisitors. This is pure hysterical talk, and should be treated with contempt. However, as it was said in reply to my letter, I am going to pass it with just one word. The work of doctors is the work of Christ. As Christ healed the sick in olden days, so the doctors heal them today. As, however, they cannot, like The Master, lay their hands on the sick and heal them, they have to resort to other measures, namely, medicine. To get this, especially in the case of anti-toxin, it is often necessary to experiment on animals; but as for it being an excuse for young medicos to perpetrate cruelty, it is absolutely untrue. The experiments are done simply for the purpose of saving human lives. Again the doctors have been accused of being cowards and not daring to reply to the accusations hurled at them. I am going to tell you why. Far from being cowards, the doctors have considered these accusations too silly and beneath their contempt to take any notice of them, and have not considered it worth their while to waste time or paper in answering them. If, however, they did, they would wipe the floor with you anti-vivisectionists in such a way that, when they had finished, you would not know whether you were standing on your head or your heels. In conclusion, I wish to say that it is high time that this sentimental nonsense about vivisectors should be put down with a firm hand. The doctors are doing their best for the welfare of mankind, and for a lot of hysterical ignorami to be allowed to get up and dictate to them what they should and should not do, is disgraceful. It is about time the law stepped in.

GRAIN ELEVATOR

Sir,—The Grain Elevator By-Law will be voted upon by the ratepayers next Thursday, and on the result depends whether or not the Panama-Pacific Company builds the first terminal grain elevator in Victoria.

Some time ago (about two years) we voted on a by-law to give this company certain privileges, including tax exemption, on a site at Ogden Point Piers for a long period of years and at that time it was understood the company would obtain ample financing. The company has failed dismally in this respect and now the ratepayers are being asked to provide the funds to build the elevator. In other words, the ratepayers are to build and equip an elevator under the direction of the company which proposes to operate it and the only security is the plant, for which we are asked to pay practically the whole cost. There is no margin for security, and it is a "heads you win; tails I lose" proposition for the promoters, done on shoestring financing.

But it might not be quite so bad if it is to mark the beginning of the firm establishment of Victoria as a grain port and thus lead to other things. Do not mistake my motive! I am just as anxious as anyone else in the city to see this development. It must, however, be on a reasonable basis that will not stand to cast a tremendous burden of additional taxation on the ratepayers, especially at the present time when the city is just getting out of its financial difficulties.

The Mayor's opinion should be carefully noted, as after all his efforts towards industrial and port development, he has openly declared his lack of confidence in this by-law to guarantee bonds for the Panama-Pacific Company.

In my opinion, the fundamental requirement for successful operation of an elevator here has been too lightly considered and not sufficiently investigated by the City Council and by the committee supporting the by-law. This is on the matter of the supply of grain, and sufficient thereof, to make the elevator pay.

Vancouver, with a present elevator capacity of about 7,500,000 bushels, has during the crop year just ending handled about 43,000,000 bushels of wheat. In the year previous the figure was about 53,000,000. The volume depends jointly on the size of the Western crop (principally Alberta), on the amount of shipping offering on this Coast, and on advantages of export from this Coast governed by world demand. The Wheat Pool, said to control about two-thirds of the Prairie crop through the farmers and its country elevator connections, has leased a Government elevator at Vancouver and the one at Prince Rupert and has decided to build a new elevator at Vancouver of two and a half million bushels capacity. It also has world-wide connections, so that it would appear to be firmly established with all required facilities at the present time. The remaining supply is mostly in the hands of large companies that have the country elevators on the Prairies to use as feeders for their terminal arrangements in Vancouver.

What feeders has the Panama-Pacific Company got for the proposed terminal elevator here? It is said that the farmer shareholders will ship their grain this way, but that is a very unsatisfactory answer because (1) In general practice farmers deliver their grain to country elevators and get a cash ticket for it; after that what care have they where the grain goes to? They have no control over the grain that has been sold. (2) Even all the wheat produced by the farmer shareholders would be a doubtful amount to depend on. (3) Not all of the farmer shareholders live in the territory (Alberta and part of Western Saskatchewan) where it would pay them to ship West, instead of east to Fort William.

It would be practically impossible for a privately-owned terminal elevator to operate successfully, either here or in Vancouver, without having a good line of feeders on the Prairies.

We haven't yet seen a summary of the estimated receipts and expenses for the elevator. The working expenses (including salaries and wages) will likely be around $40,000 a year (it will only employ fifteen to twenty men), and the bond interest and sinking fund another $35,000, so that at least six million bushels of wheat will have to be handled to realize enough to meet expenses and charges before making any profit. Can this be done by a new company that is not firmly established in the grain business? (Vancouver terminal elevator charges, including insurance, are 1 1-4c per bushel for the first fifteen days, and storage charges are 1-30c per bushel per day after the first fifteen days.)

A further argument is advanced that the Canadian National Railways favors this elevator project. The C.N.R. can lose nothing and stands to gain considerably if there is any grain traffic to Victoria, but unfortunately the C.N.R. does not control the destination of grain shipments. It merely carries the grain as directed by the shippers.

There is a clause in the lease of the site from the Government to the Panama-Pacific Company that in case of failure the Government will take over the plant "at a valuation" and in case of dispute the "valuation" will be decided by a judge of the Exchequer Court of Canada. To expect the "valuation" to cover the amount of the mortgage held by the city is absurd, as the "valuation" would have to be based on the elevator's earning capacity, which would then be still more doubtful and might be nil, unless one of the big companies or the Wheat Pool would take it over. The Prince Rupert elevator was leased by the Government to the Wheat Pool for one hundred dollars a year, and during the past crop year has handled about five million bushels, which has been supplied through the Wheat Pool's Prairie elevator connections.

There are many other objectionable features that have been pointed out by the Mayor and others, and which are quite sufficient in themselves to condemn this proposition, but evidently there are numbers of citizens who are willing to advocate a desperate gamble with the city's credit. If we are to have elevator developments at this port they should be obtained along sound business lines, and if we cannot get substantial grain interests to come in with us we had better leave grain elevator promotions alone.

MEMORIES OF ST. ANN'S

(Lines composed in commemoration of the tenth annual reunion of the alumni of St. Ann's Academy, Victoria, British Columbia, July 27, 1927.)

How good indeed, it is to meet
In after years with those Who fanned the lamp of learning ere
Our several ways we chose!

To conjure back the days—alas!
How flies the time away—
When we, as little children did
Our utmost zeal display.

There, in those dear old convent walls,
How sweet it is to dwell
In fancy with our mentors, who
Such tender thoughts impell!

How, as we grew in stature they Immortal joys unbarred,
From unplumbed depths drew hidden grace,
Without which life ill-starred.

How diligence and rectitude
Our trials overcame;
How better than great wealth it was
To treasure a good name.

How, never failing, day by day,
They preached humility;
With copy book precision, too,
Stressed true nobility.

How such did not consist of gold,
Or paragons of art;
But of those royal attributes
Nursed in a noble heart.

A host of kindred thoughts must needs
Flit hither, thither, while
Our recollections of St. Ann's
In quick succession file.

And thus it is that we approach
Her portals once again,
Loyal to Alma Mater and
Those whom our hearts enchain.

Mary H. Cockford-Rathom.

FIFTY YEARS AGO TODAY

(From The Daily British Colonist of July 31, 1877)

Canning Salmon—The Pacific Coast is coming forward conspicuously in the canning business. It is estimated that in Oregon alone there are 800,000 cases of canned fish and 450,000 of canned fruit put up annually. The business is constantly increasing, and the increase for the present year, it is said, will be fifty per cent over last year. Fraser River and Skeena River, in British Columbia, are preparing to largely supplement the world's supply of salmon.

From New Westminster—The steamer Enterprise arrived at 5 p.m. yesterday from New Westminster with 1,300 cases of salmon, 100 of which were immediately shipped on board the City of Carlisle, bound for Valparaiso. The following passengers came down: Mrs. Black, Mrs. Ward, Miss N. Irving, W. Hewesen, J. Rousseau and Mr. Holding.

Game Laws—Deer became venison from Monday. Grouse will be made game on Friday, to the tenth of August.

Do You Remember?

Conducted by Herbert Keat

A canoe named the Tillicum, which sailed from Victoria with Captain Voss and Norman K. Luxton, for a voyage round the world? The following reference to this is culled from The London Daily Sketch:

Some Indian, who fashioned a canoe by hollowing out a red cedar log never imagined that a white man would sail the tiny craft 40,000 miles across three oceans from Victoria, British Columbia, to London. Thirty-eight feet long, five and a half feet wide, and weighing less than two tons, the Tillicum was the smallest craft to make such a journey as that performed by Captain John Voss. Accompanied part of the way by a Canadian journalist named Luxton, Captain Voss took the little vessel across the Pacific to Samoa and the Fiji Islands, then on to Australia, Tasmania and New Zealand; across the Indian Ocean to South Africa, then across the Atlantic to Pernambuco, and from there to London. Sailing from British Columbia on May 21, 1901, Captain Voss finished his trip in three years and three months.

The loss of the tugboat Velos, off Trial Island, with five of the crew of seven drowned. The storm king was out in all his fury that night, which was in April, 1895.

When a brick building used to occupy a site facing View Street, just west of the present Bishop's Palace, surrounded by a high board fence and occupied by the Sisters of St. Ann's, and used as a day school for girls?

NANAIMO'S NEW HOTEL IS OPENED

events. The business on that route of the Coast service was seven times more in July, 1927, as compared with July, 1911.

During the month now closing, the company had landed 15,000 passengers on the wharf at Nanaimo from Vancouver, and had brought in 2,200 automobiles. The company, Captain Troup said, stood ready to back up every investment looking to the development of Nanaimo, and for that purpose had on order a large steamer for passenger and car transportation, which was to be here next April. That order was another proof of the confidence the company felt that the future of Nanaimo was certain, and that its relation to the tourist trade was assured.

EXAMPLE CITED

The Captain briefly referred to his personal efforts to secure the co-operation of the C.P.R. directors in the proposed loan, and said that Nanaimo might take courage and faith from the example of the Tacoma Hotel, built many years ago, ahead of the business then offering, but which had done much to build up and advance that city, and eventually to develop a healthy rivalry with Seattle.

Mr. Stockdill explained that it had fallen to him to report to the directors upon the proposed loan. As one of the committee which had charge of the opening of the Hotel Saskatchewan, at Regina, in May, he could appreciate what an hotel of that character represented in the life of the community which possessed it.

Mr. Stockdill added that eventually the time might come for an all-British Columbia triangle run, Vancouver-Victoria-Nanaimo, dependent on the development of the business arising from this venture. He congratulated the people of Nanaimo in showing this splendid example of self help.

Mr. S. F. Cunliffe, chairman of the local board of directors, traced the history of the building of the hotel by a brief narrative in which from time to time he introduced the men responsible for the various details, and throughout showed that many problems had been faced resolutely, and a splendid spirit of community effort demonstrated.

This community spirit brought forth encomiums from Mr. J. D. Kearns, on behalf of the company which has been formed to operate the hotel, it being stated that throughout a "remarkable example had been given of business judgment by men not skilled particularly in hotel management."

CREDIT GIVEN

Mr. Cunliffe gave the credit for initiating the project to Mr. E. H. Bird, now a resident of Victoria, who had got the first data together before the survey was made by representatives of the Hockenbury system.

For the architects, Mr. Charles D. Thompson, of Vancouver, of Sharp & Thompson, and Colonel Keen, on behalf of the E. J. Ryan Contracting Company, the contractors, both spoke. It was reported that all furnishings had been supplied on contract by David Spencer, Limited.

Among those noticed from Victoria were Messrs. H. E. Beasley, general superintendent, and J. D. Fraser, superintendent of the Esquimalt & Nanaimo Railway; and E. J. Martin, representing the Victoria Hotel Men's Association. Mayor J. C. Pendray, of Victoria, also attended the dinner.

Yukon Silver-Lead Ore Exempted From Royalty

OTTAWA, July 30.—The exemption from the payment of royalty on the content of silver-lead ores shipped from the Yukon Territory has been extended for one year, under on Order in Council published in The Canada Gazette today. Exemption was first granted for a three-year period on June 5, 1922. The order sets forth that the exemption has been continued "in order to permit the continuance of the silver-lead industry in the Yukon Territory," as no smelter has yet been established in the territory and the industry has to ship to Pacific Coast smelters at high transportation costs.

Mr. E. H. Gourlie Dies

TORONTO, July 30.—Ernest Howard Gourlie, sixty, for a long period connected with the newspaper business in Canada, is dead at his home here. In 1891 Mr. Gourlie spent some time in New Westminster, B.C., on the New Westminster Ledger. Returning to Toronto he was for a time circulation manager of the Toronto World. He is survived by his widow, six sons and one daughter.

CLUBLAND WILL HAVE BIG WEEK

VICTORIA GYROS TO INSPECT COLD STORAGE PLANT TOMORROW AT NOON

Rev. Robert Connel Speaks to Kiwanis Club Tuesday on "Some Delights of Curiosity"

CLUB CALENDAR

MONDAY—Gyro Club, luncheon at B. Wilson & Company plant on Herald Street, 12:10.

TUESDAY—Kiwanis Club, Chamber of Commerce auditorium, luncheon, 12:40 p.m.

TUESDAY—Y's Men's Club, Y.M.C.A.; supper, 6 p.m.

THURSDAY—Roatry Club, Empress Hotel ballroom, luncheon, 12:10 p.m.

THURSDAY—Kinsmen Club, Empress Hotel private dining-room, supper, 6:15 p.m.

FRIDAY—Hundred Per Cent Club, Dominion Hotel, luncheon, 12:45 p.m.

Clubland in Victoria will have another active week, commencing tomorrow with the Gyro Club's visit to the cold storage plant of the B. Wilson Company, on Herald Street. The Gyros will meet at the company's premises at 12:10 p.m., when a box lunch will be partaken of, and this will be followed by an inspection of the plant by the clubmen.

"Some Delights of Curiosity" will be the theme of an address which Rev. Robert Connell, Island naturalist, will deliver on Tuesday at noon, at the Kiwanis Club luncheon in the Chamber of Commerce auditorium. Mr. R. W. Mayhew, a past president of the Rotary Club, will speak briefly on the grain elevator by-law, upon which the local ratepayers will vote on Thursday, August 4. The programme is in the hands of the transportation committee, of which Kiwanian Stan Wallis is chairman.

Premier Oliver's Birthday Will Be Marked by Cabinet

PREMIER OLIVER today attains the age of seventy-one years. The event will be marked on the part of his colleagues in the Cabinet by a letter sent him by the Provincial Secretary, acting on behalf of the members of the Ministry and voicing their appreciation of the valuable services that he has rendered the Province and the party which he has led, and congratulating him upon attaining another milestone. The letter will be accompanied by a bouquet of flowers. In view of the Premier's physical condition, the members of the Government will forego attending in a body to extend their good wishes.

A mystery programme, which will include a musical turn, will be presented at the Rotary Club luncheon, on Thursday next at 12:10 p.m., in the ballroom of the Empress Hotel.

The Kumtuks Club will not hold any meetings this week, but on Monday evening, August 8, the club will hold a supper picnic at the Gorge Park.

The Kinsmen Club will meet at supper on Thursday night next, at 6:15 o'clock, in the private dining-room of the Empress Hotel.

THE MODERN MISS

She was trying to be friendly to the little girl whose mother was a great friend of hers.

Needless to say, the little girl regarded her with great pity, not to say suspicion.

"I hope you are getting on well at school," she remarked. "Now, I wonder if you can spell horse?"

For a minute or two the little girl regarded her with scornful eyes, then:

"I could if I wanted to," she answered quietly, "but don't you think it's rather old-fashioned."

NEW CORONER'S JURY SWORN IN

INQUEST INTO DEATH OF MISS JEAN CODDINGTON WILL BE HELD ON THURSDAY

First Jury Discharged Because One of Jurymen Was Under Age of Twenty-One Years

The coroner's jury, which will commence next Thursday morning, at 11 o'clock, to inquire into the circumstances of the death of Miss Jean Coddington, will be comprised of Mr. H. W. Dearman, foreman, and Messrs. Harold P. Hewlett, ex-reeve of Oak Bay; W. S. Campbell, Edward C. McQuade, William G. Crawford, Cecil Major Hose and Edward Cooper.

This new jury, empanelled and sworn in yesterday by Coroner Dr. E. C. Hart, and the former jury, which sat and viewed the body of last Monday morning's automobile crash on Rockland Avenue, was discharged.

Dr. Hart explained that Mr. J. A. Harrison, who had sat on the first jury, was found to be under twenty-one years of age, and therefore could not legally serve as a juryman.

The members of the new jury yesterday viewed the body of Miss Coddington at the B.C. Funeral Parlors, and then adjourned until Thursday, August 4, at 11 a.m., when it is expected that Fraser Tolmie, driver of the car, will be recovered sufficiently to testify, along with Archibald Lang, third person in the automobile when it crashed at Rockland Avenue.

The jurymen were all bound over on a bond of $100 to appear next Thursday at the inquest.

MR. J. ALEXANDER CALLED BY DEATH

Funeral Service of Well-Known Lawyer Will Be Held Tuesday Afternoon at Christ Church

The funeral of Mr. John S. T. Alexander, of 1237 St. David Street, Oak Bay, will take place from the B.C. Funeral Chapel on Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, proceeding to Christ Church Cathedral, where services will be conducted by Rev. A. T. Archibald.

Mr. Alexander died at the family residence Friday night after an illness of some week's duration. He was the eldest and last surviving son of the late Mr. George Alexander, of Rathvindon, County Carlow, Ireland. He came to Canada in 1885. Studying law, he graduated and practised for some years in Lethbridge, in partnership with Mr. C. F. P. Conybeare, K.C. In 1889 he went to Fernie, where he continued his legal practice and later became Provincial Government Agent.

In 1913 Mr. Alexander came to Victoria and was selected as counsel on the Board of Investigation under the Water Act, which post he held until his death. His wife died three months ago. He is survived by his sister, Miss Alexander, of 1237 St. David Street.

TRAVELERS TO GIVE ROUND-WORLD TRIP

Frolic Under Local Body Will Be Held on Large Scale—Proceeds Going to Charity

Mr. A. C. Lindsay, senior councillor of the United Commercial Travelers, Victoria, announced last evening that another monster frolic would be held here September 15. This frolic, which is an annual affair with the Travelers, will be staged at the Royal Victoria Theatre and Crystal Garden, the net proceeds to be devoted to charitable purposes.

"In view of the fact that the frolic was such an outstanding success last year," stated Mr. Lindsay last evening, "and so many were unable to gain admittance to the Crystal Garden, where the frolic was held, this year we have decided to hold the vaudeville entertainment at the Royal Victoria Theatre, and the dancing at the Crystal Garden."

In connection with the frolic a prize is being offered of a Canadian Pacific round-the-world cruise on the Empress of France, or a Chrysler automobile.

EFFECT OF DAMPNESS

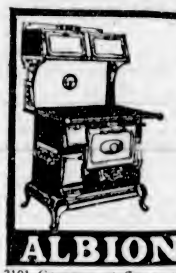

A prolonged period of damp weather will cause noises to develop around the body of a car.

MANY FOREST FIRES REPORTED

Total So Far This Year Is 214 as Compared With 1,434 for Corresponding Period of 1926

Eighty-eight new fires were reported last week to the forestry branch of the Provincial Department of Lands. This is the largest number reported during any one week this season; and any of these might have been serious, the department announced.

Hot weather with low humidity has been general all over the Province and the Meteorological Department advises that it will continue for several days.

The total number of fires to date as compared with last year are as follows:

Cariboo	22	93
Kamloops	18	74
South Interior	165	883
Prince George	52	91

King's Daughters' Tag Day—The sum of $328.11 was realized by the King's Daughters' tag day yesterday, and the committee wish to thank all those who helped to make it a success.

Smoker in Honor of H.M.S. Colombo—Members of the crew of H.M.S. Colombo were hosts of the Pro Patria Branch of the Canadian Legion at a smoking concert held in the clubrooms last night. About one hundred visiting tars and marines attended the function.

Addition to Sanitarium—The Provincial Government is taking steps to increase the capacity for patients at the Tranquille Sanatarium near Kamloops. A new building will be erected to take care of 235 patients. The whole of the addition will be devoted to this use, the present building affording all the accommodation that is needed for other purposes.

Local Students Successful—Three students of Mr. G. Jennings Burnett have been successful in gaining honors with their music examinations in connection with the Toronto Conservatory of Music. Miss Mabel Goldfinch, in history, harmony and counterpoint; in the intermediate grade; Miss Beatrice Robson, in piano and theory in the junior grade, and Miss Helen Ockenden, a little player of eleven years, in piano and theory in the junior grade.

Yucca in Bloom—A particularly handsome specimen of yucca, a genus of American liliaceous plant, with an ivory-colored bell-like flower, is in bloom at the present time in the garden of Mr. T. S. Futcher, 1899 Foul Bay Road, at the corner of Goldsmith Avenue. Mr. Futcher has three of these plants in bloom at the present time, the handsome specimen referred to having four stems, while a second plant has three stems, and a third, one. Mr. Futcher states that he supplies the plant with a lot of water, but that in other respects the Victoria climate seems to be absolutely ideal to the growth of this so-called sub-tropical plant.

Runs Over Deer on Malahat—While out motoring on the Malahat Drive with some friends on Friday night, Mr. William Fairall hit and ran over a deer on Tunnel Hill. Mr. Fairall stated yesterday that he saw the deer about 150 feet away and slowed down to let it get out of the way, but after heading for the side of the road it turned immediately in front of the car. The occupants had visions of sampling some venison, but when the car was stopped, Mr. Deer recovered himself and vaulted up to the rocks, apparently none the worse for the adventure, outside of being minus some hair. Mr. Fairall declared that the deer, while the car was passing over him, let fly with all fours, and the kicking sounded somewhat like a machine gun in action.

An Aristocrat Among Jerseys of Province

GLAMORGAN WEXFORD BINDLE (NO. 31129)

The above purebred animal is owned by Mr. Herbert E. Burbidge, Babbacombe, Royal Oak, and will be exhibited at the Victoria Show this Fall. Some of the most notable strains of Jersey-bred cattle are related to this valuable animal. These are very popular among the breeders of the United States and Canada and large importers like Spann & Sons and the Meradale have imported the stock. Yearlings have brought as high as $1,350. He was imported in dam by Mr. J. S. H. Matson, and is by Bindle, a grandson of Sybil's Gamboge and Fern's Oxford Noble. His dam in Young Diana, who was first in a class of eleven, all imported cows at the last Victoria Exhibition and is now in the Spencer herd. She is on R.O.P. test and is expected to qualify for a gold medal.

WORKLESS YOUTH CREATES PROBLEM

Despite Great Increase in Employment in Britain, Many Young Men Lack Occupation

By HERBERT BAILEY

LONDON, July 30.—In an attempt to accelerate migration towards Canada, with a view to ultimately reducing the enormous unemployment still prevalent, the British Government has decided to enlarge the farm training centres in Britain so that 2,000 men may be trained annually for farm labor in Canada instead of 1,000 as at present. Otherwise the Government is not hopeful regarding a reduction in the present unemployment figures, which exceed one million, exclusive of 1,500,000 who receive relief under the Poor Law from local authorities. A sidelight on the position as it affects British youth is at present visible in London, where several thousands of young able men walked hundreds of miles from the country in the hope of obtaining work repaving city streets, an extensive scheme for such repairs now proceeding.

Meanwhile, in order to deal with juvenile unemployment it is proposed to establish a national advisory council, which will see what can be done to compel boys and girls to attend training schools instead of roaming idly about the streets.

The only cheerful feature of the situation generally is that actually there are 1,125,000 more persons working today than in 1922, while the cost of living is lower than at any time since the war.

The Child (disappointedly): "Oh, Daddy! You've Moved!"

THAT SLIM SILHOUETTE

Tragedy had fallen upon the little gang of roadmenders. One of their number had been knocked down by the steam-roller.

After much discussion the foreman ordered two workmen to take the injured man home.

Later these two returned and reported to their chief.

"What did Tom's wife say?" asked the foreman.

"She was out," was the answer.

"Then what did you do with Tom?"

"Oh," came the careless reply, "we pushed him under the door."

TOO MUCH TO EXPECT

Angrily the policeman on point duty stopped the little car that had tried to sneak past his outstretched arm.

"Can't you see me?" he demanded of the driver.

"I—er—must confess I did," returned the motorist meekly.

"Then why didn't you stop?" asked the policeman, becoming more angry than ever.

"Well, I lost my head," explained the wrong-doer sadly. "I had just spent half an hour in getting this thing to start, and I thought it was a pity to stop her so soon."

A RECORD-BREAKER

With blushing countenance and breathing heavily, young Clarence entered the drawing-room, where the family were gathered.

He adopted a dramatic attitude.

"I have broken all the dancing records," he announced gravely; and the company looked interested.

"Really?" exclaimed his father. "What do you get for it?"

"Er—that's what I've come to find out," replied Clarence. "You see, I dropped the lot on the floor!"

NO WONDER!

When he realized that money does not go so far now as it did a few years ago, Griggs determined to grow his own vegetables.

He started to dig up the garden and after half an hour's hard work was astonished to find half-a-crown at his feet. He dug with renewed ardour and several more coins rewarded his efforts.

"Hanged if this isn't a money mine!" he said, digging away for all he was worth. "I wonder what I'll find next?"

His arms ached and perspiration trickled down his face.

He could stand it no longer. He straightened his back at last and a glistening coin fell at his feet. There was a hole in his trousers pocket.

In the Period Style of Louis XVI

Departing from the accepted style of modern pianoforte architecture, this instrument shows in its lines and curves the ornamentation of Louis XVI period. The design is one of graceful elegance, and it is a type that is in keeping with the dainty surroundings of the modern home.

Cable-Nelson Pianos

—of which this is one of the very newest designs—are noted for their remarkable beauty of tone and quality. It is an instrument fit to grace any home of refinement and culture. The model illustrated above is compact in size and very suitable for the modern bungalow living-room.

STEWART'S SHOE HOUSE, Victoria, B.C.

Gentlemen,—Will you please send me a pair of shoes, one size larger than 440-S, No. 5611, at $4.95. I have had three or four pairs of those low brown brogues from you in the past years. Kindly let me hear from you at once, as I am leaving on my vacation next Sunday.

Very truly yours,
(Mrs.) B. B. M.

In fairness to yourself YOU should call down and examine the shoes that cause people to send all the way across the 49th parallel to obtain a pair. STEWART certainly gives good value.

PACIFIC RELIANCE DUE OCTOBER 27

New Furness-Withy Twin-Screw Motorship to Run Between Pacific Coast and U.K. Ports

Towards the latter part of last year Messrs. Furness, Withy & Co. placed with the Blythswood Shipbuilding Co. orders for four twin-screw motorships. The first of these—the Pacific Reliance is now fitting out and, will eventually be placed in the service between British ports and the Pacific and North America, operated by the Norfolk & North American Steam Shipping Co. She is 450 feet in length, with a beam of sixty feet and a depth to shelter-deck of forty-two feet, her deadweight tonnage being about 10,000. The main machinery has been constructed by Messrs. John G. Kincaid & Co., Ltd., Greenock, and consists of two Harland-B. and W. type single-acting engines, having a total output of approximately 4,000 b.h.p., and giving the ship a speed of thirteen knots loaded. The lower 'tween decks are insulated throughout for carrying fruit and a complete installation of refrigerating machinery, fans, etc., is installed, and all the auxiliary machinery, both on deck and in the engine-room, is electrically driven. The steering gear is of the electro-hydraulic type with double rams supplied by J. Hastie & Co., of Greenock, and operated from the navigating bridge by telemotor supplied by McTaggart, Scott & Co.; there are ten electric winches of six tons capacity, two of three tons capacity, and an eight-ton warping winch. The cargo winches have variable speeds regulated by contractor gear fitted in deckhouses. The refrigerating machinery, by J. & E. Hall, Ltd., is on the CO-2 system and is also driven electrically. There are three large electric generators for the electric installation, each set of 165 kw. being supplied by W. H. Allen, Sons & Co. The Blythswood Co. has in hand, in addition to these ships, a 10,000-ton motor-tanker for Messrs. C. T. Bowring & Co., to be driven by a six-cylinder Kincaid-Harland-B. and W. engine of 3,300 b.h.p. and a rather large tanker, with an engine of the same type and capacity.

The Pacific Reliance will reach Victoria about October 27, according to advices received by King Bros., customs brokers.

Free State Mourns Death of Vice-President

The funeral of Kevin O'Higgins, Irish minister of justice and vice-president of the Irish Free State, who was murdered by three unknown men, was witnessed by over a million people who gathered along the route taken by the cortege hours before the appointed time. The coffin was borne on a gun carriage and followed by a large number of military lorries laden with flowers. This picture was taken at the graveside of the brilliant young statesman.

VESUVIUS GIVES SPLENDID SHOW

Most Violent Eruption of Recent Years —Seismologist Expresses Opinion They Are Not Dangerous

NAPLES, July 30.— Mount Vesuvius spewed tons of incandescent boulders and smaller debris into the sky today in one of the most violent eruptions of recent years. A stream of lava rolled down the slopes at the rate of three yards a second, but the movement slowed as the lava moved from the crater and its fiery soul cooled and hardened. From the bowels of the volcano there came smashing explosions at intervals of a minute, and with each gigantic upheaval within the crater there arose over the scarred slopes a plume of mightily rocks and of stones and cinders.

Some damage was done to the wooden stairway over which guides normally would be escorting tourists, and a train station near the summit was destroyed. But Professor Walladra, Director of the Vesuvius Observatory, told the populace around the base of the volcano that there was no danger to them in what looked to a layman like the beginning of a great disaster.

Athlete Injured

VANCOUVER, July 30.—Word has been received in the city that Harold Mahon, U.B.C. athlete, suffered a compound fracture of the right leg below the knee while attempting to transfer from one boat to another in the Hecate Straits, Thursday afternoon. According to the report, Mahon's leg caught between the guard rails of the boats as they swung together. Mahon was cruising timber in Northern British Columbia for the Provincial Government.

Another version of printed crepe de Chine is shown here in red and white, and white and red. It is a particularly happy choice of materials and the style of the dress shows the contrast to best advantage.

The blouse is of white dotted with red and has a formal collar of the same material, while the smartly cut vestee is of red dotted with white, as are the tabs of the pockets and the pleated skirt.

The hat may be of either felt or straw in white, but small and without trimming.

Do you feel like going back to bed?

AFTER YOU have dressed your children, fed them, and sent them off to school, do you feel like going back to bed? Do you shrink from your daily task of dish-washing and house-cleaning? Are you tired? Discouraged?

Many women have found that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is an excellent tonic for that tired feeling. It builds up the appetite. It induces natural sleep. Read what these two women say about it.

GAINED 18 POUNDS

Cleveland, Ohio:—"After having my first baby I lost weight no matter what I did. I went down to 98 pounds. My neighbor told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, as it helped her very much, so I tried it. After taking four bottles I weigh 116 pounds. It has just done wonders for me and I can do my housework now without one bit of trouble."—Mrs. M. Reissinger, 10004 Nelson Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio.

Remember this package. None genuine without the signature of Lydia E. Pinkham.

NERVOUS SPELLS GONE

St. Paul, Minn.:—"I used to get nervous spells that would last a couple of days and were so bad that I was afraid in my own house in broad daylight. One day a little booklet was left on my porch and I read it through. I found a case similar to mine. I bought Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and have had fine results. Now housekeeping doesn't tire me."—Mrs. Jack Lorberter, 704 Dellwood Place, St. Paul, Minnesota.

Heads Demonstration In Trafalgar Square

VISCOUNTESS RHONDDA

Who recently headed a women's suffragist demonstration in Trafalgar Square in support of Premier Baldwin's so-called "flapper vote bill," a measure granting the ballot to all women over twenty-one years of age. She described the meeting as "the last great suffragette demonstration that will probably ever be held."

Back From Solduc

Colonel H. Appleton has returned to the city after a month's visit to Solduc Hot Springs. He reports that the new owners of the place, Captain and Mrs. Martin, in past years so favorably known to Victorians, plan to build a new hotel on the site of the old one. They hope to have it ready for use next season, and in the meantime are rapidly extending the accommodation in cottages, conveniently placed to the new large swimming bath. The motor camp is much frequented. Colonel Appleton says that the snow is only now clearing out of the lower parts near Solduc, and that only the earliest flowers have yet appeared. The trout fishing is exceptionally good, and the stocking of the lakes in the parks with trout has been most successful, fish up to four pounds being reported after the six or seven years' experiment.

Fashion Fancies

By Marie Belmont

In planning the Summer wardrobe, the white flannel coat is indispensable. It may be worn for many occasions, and is always in good taste. It is shown here in the manner of the ensemble with a small hat of white felt.

The coat has straight lines and patch pockets, and is belted with the same material stitched. The collar, sleeves and front of the coat, as well as the tops of the pockets, have a banding of grosgrain ribbon.

A plain skirt of the same flannel is worn with a brightly colored blouse that may be in plain color or in printed crepe de Chine.

Trophy for Esquimalt Conservative Picnic

TUG-OF-WAR CHALLENGE CUP

This prize, which has been presented by Mr. Archibald Lang, is to be contested for at the picnic at Saxe Point to be held next Wednesday afternoon under the auspices of the Conservatives of Esquimalt. One team that will compete for the trophy will be from the City Police Force, the other one representing His Majesties Services. In addition to this event there will be a complete programme of athletic events. A band will be in attendance and in the evening there will a few short political speeches.

CROWDS GREET GREAT "BOBBY"

British Open Champion Receives Warm Welcome From Admirers on Arrival at New York

NATIONAL OPEN IS JONES' NEXT GOAL

NEW YORK, July 30.—Bobby Jones came home last night to America and to a modest welcome warm with Southern hospitality and pride which awaited him on the seaward tip of a long pier in New York bay. The band was blaring "Hail, the Conquering Hero Comes," but the young double winner of the British open golf title entirely disregarded its rhythm as he hurried down the gangplank at the sight of his wife, mother and a hundred loyal friends from Atlanta, Ga., his home town.

In a semi-private room on the end of the pier, was held a reception that was no anti-climax to the roaring welcome New York gave Bobby last year when he came home with his first British open golf title. Winning the great event twice in succession is something that has not been done since James Braid, the Scot, did it in 1906, and New York did not attempt a welcome commensurate with the feat. At request of Bobby's fellow townsmen, he was spared even a speech and the addresses of welcome consisted uniformly of "Hail Bobby," and "Hello, Boy."

The tanned and somewhat stockily-built young man who is beginning the practice of law in Atlanta, but manages to play golf well enough to beat the world's best, was "frankly tickled" to win again.

"You always get a kick out of winning," he said when asked if the thrill of victory never faded, "and when one's over you're as keen about winning the next one."

Bobby's next goal will be the national amateur championship, which George von Elm wrested from him last year. He plans to do little golfing between now and the title event at Minneapolis, beginning August 22.

Supper Host

Mr. Norman Whittall entertained a few friends informally at supper on Tuesday evening, when those present were Mr. and Mrs. Lefevre Baker, Mr. and Mrs. S. D. Brooks, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Hamber, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. McLean, Mr. and Mrs. Victor McLean, Mr. and Mrs. R. P. Baker, Mr. and Mrs. W. G. McKenzie, Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Patterson, Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Newell, Colonel D'Arcy and Capt. Ian Mackenzie.

Helen Wills and Kea Bouman May Figure in Match

SEABRIGHT, N.J., July 30.—Prospects of an international tennis battle between Miss Helen Wills, Wimbledon champion, and Miss Kea Bouman, Holland champion, appeared today as ranking stars began to gather for the Seabright invitation tournament, which opens here Monday. Miss Wills, who established her American supremacy by an easy victory over Miss Helen Jacobs in the Essex tournament, and Miss Bouman, who arrived yesterday from Holland, have been seeded in opposite halves of the draw, and if form holds they will meet in the final round.

Miss Wills is the favorite to win the title of the first important tournament leading up to the national championships. The seeded players in the women's class are Miss Wills, Miss Eleanor Goss, Mrs. Molla Mallory, national champion, Mrs. A. H. Chapin, Jr., and Miss Bouman.

Aviators Killed

CHICAGO, July 30. — Two unidentified aviators were killed late this afternoon when the plane caught fire over Oak Lawn on Chicago's south westside and plunged to the ground. One of the men jumped from the plane while it was still 200 feet above the ground. The other jumped shortly afterward with his clothes aflame. Both were dead when witnesses reached their bodies in an open field. Either the fall or burns would have caused death.

Boys Entertain

The Craigflower Doo-Dads and the Boys' Club of Craigflower held a successful bazaar on July 27 at Craigflower School. Sales amounted to over forty dollars. The prize for best decorated stall was won by Miss Doreen O'Meara and Miss Camille Taylor. The guessing contest was won by Charles White, and the novelty bathing beauty contest was won by Bernard Wooley. The little girls who took part in the dancing were Miss Doreen O'Meara, of Sedro-Wooley; Miss Camille Taylor, of New Westminster, and Miss Bill Clair, of Craigflower. Among others present were Mr. Kyle and Mr. Hobbs.

Plan Liberal Picnic

Hon. T. D. Pattullo, Minister of Lands; Mr. C. H. O'Halloran, Mr. Carew Martin and Mr. N. W. Whittaker will be the speakers at the Saanich Liberal picnic, to be held at Beaver Lake on Wednesday, August 3, at 2 p.m. The committee in charge have completed all preliminary arrangements, and announce an attractive programme of land and water sports. It is expected the swimming races will be specially popular at this time. Good prizes will be awarded. Cars will leave the Eagle Taxi stand, Yates and Broad Streets, from 1 to 1:45 p.m. Hot water will be provided and detailed programmes of the various events will be distributed at the grounds. Visitors from adjoining districts are invited.

Prince May Pay Visit to Vancouver Exhibition

VANCOUVER, July 30.—H.R.H. the Prince of Wales may visit the Vancouver Exhibition, unofficially, according to a wire received by J. K. Matheson, manager of the exhibition, from Lieutenant-Governor Randolph Bruce.

"The Prince is agreeable to visit fair privately, if his engagements permit his arrival in Vancouver before the 20th," the telegram read.

PRESERVING HIS DIGNITY

The celebrated actor was just leaving his dressing-room en route for the stage when the manager dashed up to him.

"I want to see you, Mr. Dandini," he remarked. "Could you come round to the office after the show?"

"After the show?" echoed the actor with chilling dignity. "Are we acrobats?"

"After the performance," the other corrected himself hastily.

"The performance? Are we trained seals, then?"

"Pardon," apologized the manager. "After the play, sir."

"I will be pleased to see you then," answered Dandini.

Mayne Island Wedding

The marriage of Miss Muriel Gurney, only daughter of Captain and Mrs. A. B. Gurney, Active Pass Lighthouse, and Mr. George Helaire St. Denis, of Nelson, took place at the Church of the Holy Rosary, Vancouver, on Wednesday at 8 a.m. Rev. Father McDonald performed the ceremony. The bride was given away by her father and was attended by Miss Gene Eaton. Mr. H. S. (Tim) Gurney supported the groom.

Mendelssohn's Wedding March was played on the bride entering the church, and during the service the choir sang "Ave Maria." The bride's dress was a lovely two-piece apricot georgette, the skirt being pleated in front, the coat, with cascade revers, opening over a vest of ivory lace. Her hat was a close-fitting ivory felt trimmed with a touch of apricot ribbon. She carried a bouquet of Ophelia roses and lily of the valley and maidenhair. Mrs. St. Denis' traveling dress was of blue poiret twill.

The happy couple and friends left Vancouver at 10:30 o'clock by the Ss. Princess Marguerite, and by orders of Captain McMurray the ship was dressed in their honor and all salutes were returned. Passing through Active Pass, the ship's band played the Bridal Chorus (Lohengrin) from the foc'sle head.

Mr. and Mrs. St. Denis are en route to Seattle, Spokane and Nelson, where they will reside.

Beacon Hill Band Concert Programme

The Municipal Band, under the direction of Bandmaster James M. Miller, will give its regular weekly concert at Beacon Hill Park between the hours of 3 p.m. and 5 o'clock. The programme is as follows:

1. March, "Fiume," by Baccalari.
2. Selections from comic opera "Firefly," by Friml.
3. Idyl, "Murmures Des Fleurs," by Von Bion.
4. Humorous paraphrase, "The Tearin' o' the Green," by Douglas.
5. Overture, "Poet and Peasant," by Suppe.
6. Selection, "Squire's Popular Songs," by Hume.
7. Intermezzo, "Forget Me Not," by Macbeth.
8. Trombone solo, selected, by Bandmaster Miller.
9. Fantasia, "Evolution of Dixie," by Lake.
10. Final selection, "Songs of Ireland," by Douglas.

Fashion Fancies

By Marie Belmont

Georgette in fine tucks makes this jacket an unusual success. Banded in white silk, it is trimmed with lace, and, with the skirt in fine pleats, makes a delightful afternoon costume.

The sheer material is given body by the tucks and the straight lines of the short coat save it from fussiness. A vest of the same silk as that which binds the coat shows above the three buttons of the jacket.

The collar is of silk and the small hat of lace to match the trimming on the coat. It would be particularly appropriate for the garden party or afternoon wedding.

9 A.M.—

and a week's washing out of the way

The old-fashioned housekeeper who had her washing on the line by 9 a.m. was a miracle in her neighborhood —

But today, hundreds of women — right in this city — have a whole week's washing entirely out of the way by 9 o'clock.

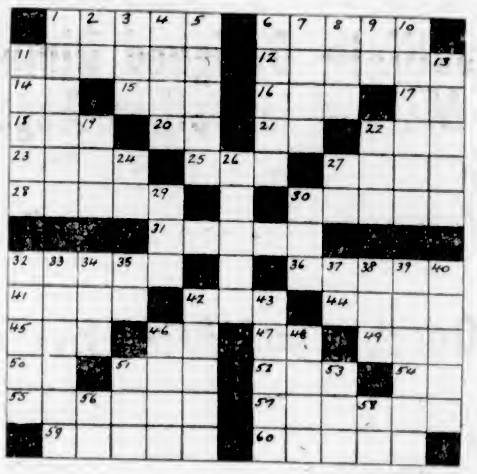

They simply gather up everything that needs washing and turn it over to our representative. Promptly, always on the same day, their clothes come back, beautifully clean and fresh — finished just as they like.

Try this better way — you'll find it a big relief to have no wash-woman to pick up after; no waiting; no worry. Phone us, and we'll gladly explain all the details.

The numbered definitions are of words which when correctly thought out fill the white spaces in the diagram. Each number represents the beginning of a word, reading either across or down to a black square. A black square to the left of the number indicates a horizontal word; above a number, a vertical word. Both vertical and horizontal numbers may begin a word, though inspection of the puzzle will show this is not always the case. The correct words will have one white space for each letter and will interlock accurately and satisfy the definitions. The horizontal and vertical words are different and through the definitions serve to check each other off with cross-clues, from which you can recognize other words. The best method of solving is, first, to fill in, down and across, all the words you are absolutely sure of. Then go over the imperfect words, referring to the definitions. The skeletons of words will often suggest another word, and by degrees—plus persistence and ingenuity — the entire series of words will cross correctly. All the words are found in standard lexicons.

ANSWER TO YESTERDAY'S PUZZLE

Saccho and Vanzetti To Learn Fate Soon

BOSTON, July 30—Nicola Sacho and Bartolomeo Vanzetti probably will know their fate next Wednesday.

The two internationally known radicals whose seven-year fight for life against a conviction for double murder, has stirred interest in every quarter of the globe, had that assurance today.

Governor Alvan T. Fuller, after listening for eight hours to final pleas of defence counsel, all but concluded his review of the trial of the two men and announced his decision probably would be ready Wednesday night.

JACK WRIGHT TAKES CANADIAN SINGLES TITLE

Montreal Davis Cup Star Downs Turenne In Thrilling Battle

Carries Maple Leaf to Glorious Victory Over Former Titleholder Before Great Gallery at Vancouver — Rest of Titles Go South

VANCOUVER, July 30.—Jack Wright, of Montreal, proved the hero of the week from a Canadian standpoint, when in the final of the Canadian lawn tennis singles championships at the Vancouver Club this afternoon before a gallery, which established new attendance records for this city, he carried the Maple Leaf to a glorious victory over the titleholder, Leon de Turenne, of Seattle. The match went three sets, 7-5, 8-6, and 6-3. Wright came from behind more than once to outguess and outgame the fleet De Turenne.

With the conclusion of the last point the gallery rose en masse and accorded Wright a wonderful ovation as he ran off the court. De Turenne followed a moment later and he, too, was vociferously applauded for his sparkling exhibition.

Miss Carolyn Swartz, of San Francisco, who ranks two below her townswoman, Miss Edith Cross, in California, triumphed over her higher-rated rival in the finals of the ladies' singles. The scores were 6-3, 3-6, 7-5.

Bradford Harrison and Sherman Lockwood, both of San Francisco, triumphed over S. Almquist, San Francisco, and John Risso, University of California, in the men's doubles event, after losing the first set, the tally being 4-6, 6-1, 6-4, 6-2.

LADIES' DOUBLES BRILLIANT

The ladies doubles was one of the brilliant exhibitions of the week's play, with the winners, Misses Cross and Swartz, playing a stiff driving game against the lobbing style as adopted by the losers, Miss L. McFarland and Miss M. Williams, Pasadena. The scores were 6-2, 1-6 and 6-4.

The final event of the matinee brought two more California pairs, Miss Swartz and Lockwood against Miss McFarland and J. K. Ruscher, Pasadena, Miss Swartz and Lockwood winning. This proved to be the most hotly contested match of the day, going the limit of three of the closest sets of the week, 7-9, 7-5, and 6-4. The match was featured by the sensational net play of Ruscher and Miss McFarland and the terrific driving of Lockwood. The advantage in each set was gained when the opposition broke through the services of Lockwood in the first, Miss McFarland in the second, and Ruscher's in the final set.

WRIGHT UNCANNY

Wright matched speed with De Turenne in the major event of the day, and the one in which the gallery was most interested. Wright forced Turenne to remain in the back court as against his habitual style of racing in with every service and drive of any depth. Wright placed with uncanny judgment and though Turenne displaced him shot after shot the Montreal man literally called his drives with the result that the titleholder was continually placed on the defensive and forced repeatedly into errors. De Turenne, too, did not stand the pace as did Wright, who finished almost as fresh as when he took the courts. Taking service, Turenne won the first game at love, but Wright came back to win at deuce.

Each was feeling the other out and playing cautiously. Turenne again won service from 40-40 and took Wright's to give him a 3-1 lead. Wright burned over several corner shots that enabled him to tie the score in the next two games at 3-3. Turenne won two in a row, but here Wright showed that fighting spirit, that on many notable occasions has carried him to championships and victories in Davis Cup matches. Wright ran out the set, winning four straight games, Turenne double faulting twice, once in each remaining service. Wright made no service errors throughout the match.

In the first four games of the second set each took the other's delivery. Then until the end of the tenth game, game followed service, the score at this point standing at 5-5. Wright then took Turenne's delivery from 30-40 to lead 6-5, but Turenne followed suit by the same point score. Wright crashed through Turenne in the thirteenth game and ran out the set at love at 8-6.

BEAUTIFUL PLACEMENTS

Wright set in a hotter pace in the third set taking the first two games in decisive manner, his forearm and backhand placements catching Turenne for brilliant aces. Turenne then took service from deuce, but Wright lost only two points in the next two games to lead at 4-1. Turenne uncorked four beautiful placements to take Wright's delivery at love and won his own service with the loss of two points. Wright again starred under pressure, for he whipped ball after ball across for points to take the next two games and the set, losing ouly a point.

Carolyn Swartz, of San Francisco, was distinctly too good for Edith Cross in the ladies' final, although the latter succeeded in taking the middle set. For the first six games each crashed through the other's delivery. Then, with Miss Cross serving twice, Miss Swartz won three straight games to win the set. In the second set Miss Cross showed her best form, placing her forearm shots to the corners, catching her opponent off position several times, winning at 6-3.

After losing the first game in the deciding set, Miss Swartz, rushing into the net following service as opportunity offered, soon had a lead of 5-1. Here Miss Cross started to fight and drew applause by the brilliance of her placements. Miss Swartz was match point at 5-4, but Miss Cross took the game and eventually evened the set at 5-5. Miss Swartz ran out at 7-5, each of the last two games from 40-30.

LADIES' DOUBLES

The ladies' doubles in which Miss Cross and Miss Swartz faced Misses McFarland and Williams, was lobbing against driving, the former pair having an edge all the way, though the Pasadena girls played an uphill game throughout. Miss Cross and Miss McFarland were the pick of the two sides in cross court overhead placings from the service court.

In the final set the ultimate winners were leading at 5-2, but the losers pulled up to 5-4 before dropping the final game and the match.

Risso and Almquist battled Harrison and Lockwood, the new champions, the full route, the match being featured by smashing hard drives and sharp volleys with all four players standing in the service court at times. Harrison and Lockwood lost the opening set at 6-4, but from then on there was never any serious doubt as to the outcome. Almquist's terrific services were the feature of this match, while Lockwood again starred by the force and accuracy of his forearm volleying.

The Canadian Association of Amateur Oarsmen will hold the Olympic trials in connection with their regatta on the Royal Canadian Henley course here next year.

At the annual meeting of the association, the executive committee was empowered to hold the trials. During the course of discussion it was definitely pointed out that there was no thought of composite crews in the plans now under way, but that the best crews, if they were adjudged by the Canadian Olympic Committee to be of Olympic calibre, would be the representatives of Canada.

S. F. Smith, of the Argo Rowing Club, Toronto, was elected president.

FINALS REACHED IN ESQUIMALT TENNIS

Ladies' Singles Crown Is Won by Miss Thomas in Straight Sets From Miss Welch

Playing a powerful backhand game, and driving with great force throughout, Miss Thomas defeated Miss Welch in the final of the ladies' singles of the Esquimalt tennis tournament, 6-2, 6-3, at the Hillcrest courts yesterday. The winner's experience proved too much for her youthful opponent, although she put up a great battle.

In the mixed doubles, Miss Matson and J. R. Matson were forced to the third set before finally disposing of Miss Rasmussen and Butler, 6-1, 4-6, 6-1. Results follow:

Ladies' singles, final—Miss Thomas defeated Miss Welch, 6-2, 6-3.

Mixed doubles—Miss Welch and Davey defeated Mrs. Thomas and Thomas, 6-1, 6-0; Miss Matson and J. R. Matson defeated Miss Rasmussen and Butler, 6-1, 4-6, 6-1.

Men's doubles—McCallum and Davey defeated Kent-Fawkes and Pullen, 6-1, 6-2.

Today's draw:

LADIES' DOUBLES

2:00 p.m.—Misses Parkinson vs. Miss H. Stevens and Miss M. Tisdall.

2:45 p.m.—Mrs. and Miss Thomas vs. Miss Green and Mrs. Poyntz.

4:30 p.m.—Final.

MEN'S SINGLES

3:30 p.m.—Butler vs. Porter.

LADIES' CONSOLATION

4:00 p.m.—Miss Green vs. Miss Margaret Harris.

3:30 p.m.—Miss Stevens vs. Miss Mabel Harris.

BIG SALMON BEING TAKEN AT COWICHAN

COWICHAN BAY, July 30.—Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Clements landed three beautiful salmon this morning, weighing 17, 19 and 33 pounds, on a No. 6 Glendon-Stewart spoon and two pounds of lead. Mrs. Bevan, who holds the record for the largest salmon caught in this bay when she landed a sixty-two-pound salmon last year, caught one weighing forty pounds. Several more were caught, which weighed from four to twenty pounds. The fish are biting very good in the early morning and some are being caught in the evening.

Helen Wills May Give Up Championship Play

California Star Intimates That There Are More Serious Things in Life Than Conflicts on Courts—Hopes to Lift Women's National Title—Lauds British Sportsmanship

NEW YORK, July 30.—It may be that this will be the last lawn tennis championship year for Miss Helen Wills. Not that Helen of Wimbledon said so in direct phrases on her return from the sensational victories in England. She refused to discuss the point in a direct manner. The young lady, who again successfully exploited the California brand of lawn tennis in the stronghold of the game, did intimate, however, that there were more serious things to be done in the world, and while she dearly loved the stirring conflicts of the courts, they by no means represented the ultimate goal of her ambitions.

Miss Wills left no doubt on one subject. She is headed for the women's national championship title, if she can win it. "There is only one way to keep one's game up to concert pitch, so to speak, and that is by plenty of tournament competition," remarked Miss Wills as she chatted about her plans after disembarking from the Berengaria. "Yes, I expect to compete in the invitation tournament at Easthampton, L.I. What it will be after that I don't know, except that I shall endeavor to keep active right up to the women's championships at Forest Hills, beginning Monday, August 22."

According to Miss Wills, she had to put forth every effort at her command in order to win abroad. She believed that she was a trifle lucky to win at Wimbledon as she did, for at the start of the great classic she experienced a slight illness. This proved momentarily disconcerting, especially as she remembered her unfortunate experience with appendicitis last season in France.

"Wimbledon is not like Forest Hills," she replied on being told that Miss Mary K. Browne had declared that the great English classic surpassed the American tournament. "For one thing Wimbledon contiues for two weeks, while our tournament is limited to one. Then Wimbledon is a social function. In this respect it is totally different from the championship here. Usually the King and Queen attend on several days. This is the first year they have missed, and it was due solely to their many engagements throughout an unusually brilliant London social season."

BRITISH VERY FAIR

"The British are ideal sportsmen," she went on. "They will always recognize and applaud a good shot, and they are very fair. I think that the American players were quite as popular as any others. They certainly gave Tilden and Hunter a great reception and were somewhat surprised to see Tilden beaten by Cochet. Tilden did play wonderful tennis. For all that the British are human. Exactly like other nations, they like to see their own players win, but they ungrudgingly praise the winner, whoever it may be."

Talking of the English team of women challengers for the Wightman Cup, Miss Wills stated that she could not see how the Americans could successfully defend it. "It is a very strong team. Miss Betty Nuthall, despite her sixteen years, is likely to defeat any player in the world at the present time. Then there is Mrs. Kitty McKane Godfree, who is always good. So is Miss Ermintrude Harvey. Miss Gwendolyn Sterry is not quite up to their mark, although she took a set from me, the second, at 6-3, in the Wimbledon tournament. Miss Eileen Bennett is coming with the team, although not named on it. She is as sensational as Miss Nuthall is, and these two, along with Miss Kea Bouman, the Holland girl, are likely to turn things upside down in our championship at Forest Hills."

Helen of Wimbledon was a trifle shy, modestly so, as to talking of her own victory in England. "It was splendid of Tilden to say that I played the best tennis of my career," she said. "I had the sort of draw that I like. I do not mean an easy draw against opponents of lesser calibre. From the start I had formidable opposition. To my way of thinking, it's the way to succeed, for the strong opponent compels one to play her best, while the occasional weaker opponent encountered in coming through the rounds, has the effect of throwing one off her game, and that is bad."

All of the newer generation of women players abroad are hitting hard and coming up to the net, according to Miss Wills's view of it. They are exploiting the all-court type of game in a manner that will prove a revelation to Americans in the national championship.

Miss Wills engaged in a short practice session at Forest Hills the other day. She has lost something of her statelliness on the courts and she gets her body into the swing of her racquet more than she has in the past. The result is that, with her better timing and stance, she gets much more leverage in her stroking, which means greater power.

From the very outset, without any preliminary unlimbering shots, Miss Wills hit out with tremendous swipes at the ball. There were times when she almost lifted herself from the ground with the forcefulness of her forehand, just as William Johnston does on the same stroke. It was a thing to marvel at, to see a girl stroke with such terrific pace as few players in the men's rank can muster.

There were other things in Miss Wills's performance to be praised. The way she kept up on her toes, covered the ball, anticipated her opponent's thrusts and bent forward to receive service, all testified to the fact that Miss Wills today is a keener, more mentally and physically alert antagonist than she has been in the past, when she was almost a stationary figure in her back court.

In addition there was a greater flexibility and variety to her attack. The way in which she suddenly hauled in on her length to resort to short slices, and the subtlety with which she softened her stroking to catch her unsuspecting opponent off her guard, were evidences that the California girl had been working to add finesse to her game.

The women's national championship singles and doubles on August 22, will find Miss Wills fighting to regain the singles crown, which she was forced to default last year owing to her attack of appendicitis, and which is now held by Mrs. Molla Mallory. She will then go to Boston for the national mixed doubles at Boston, August 29, and at the conclusion of the tournament will return to her home in California.

MEXICO WINS THIRD MATCH FROM JAPAN

ST. LOUIS, July 30.—Mexico defeated Japan in the third Davis Cup international tennis match here late today when Robert Kinsey and Clande Butlin, representing Mexico, won from Takeichi Harada and Zenso Shimizu, of Japan, in a great five-set battle. The score was 7-5, 6-2, 2-6, 3-5, 6-3.

HOME RUN DUEL CAUSING WORRY

Crowds Turn Out Only When Ruth and Gehrig Appear—Washington and Cleveland Want Change

YANKS' OWNER ASKED TO SPLIT UP PAIR

NEW YORK, July 30.—"Old Scout" says: As might be expected, the Yankee home-run kings are creating worry around the American League circuit, where crowds turn out only when the Babe and his busting partner appear at the local ball yard.

Washington, which has a faint pennant hope, and Cleveland, which has none, believe that either the home-run trust should be busted or else the Yankee park be moved around so that home runs will not be so easy. Dire things are prophesied for the Yankee owner unless he parts with one of his heroes at least.

Lou Gehrig, new idol of the New York fans, is the fellow Washington observers want shipped to some other city to balance the circuit smashes. It is said that the proposition has been discussed more than once, but no one expects the New York team to rip up its slugging outfit just because there is a runaway race and the Yankees are responsible for it.

Bucky Harris is one of those who blames the Yankee park for the fourply drives. He predicts that New York won't be as dangerous away from home as at the Stadium. The only other yard where homers are plentiful is Sportsman's Park, in St. Louis, where the home talent used to ring up four-base hits with great regularity.

FEW AT CLEVELAND

Home runs are rarely seen at the Cleveland ball yard, the most frequent being made inside the grounds. Only a few times each year are balls driven into the distant left field bleachers, and it takes a hard drive to scale the forty-foot wall in right field, yet Ruth has been known to park them over it.

Right and left field in Philadelphia offer excellent targets for heavy-hitting drives, and home runs are not an uncommon spectacle there.

Fenway Park, where the present era of home-run hitting was born, when Babe Ruth held forth with the Red Sox, has seen quite a few homers this season, but it is not the easiest spot in the world for the sluggers. The White Sox park, even with its new pavilions, has not helped the home run total for the Schalk warriors.

The general opinion, however, is that Ruth can hit homers in any park, and Gehrig is rapidly doing the same.

YORKSHIRE WINS AFTER POOR START

Down Northamptonshire Mainly on Fine Display of Holmes and Sutcliffe—Rain Halts Matches

LONDON, July 30.—Yorkshire, which made such a miserable showing in its cricket match against Northamptonshire in its first innings, mainly through a fine display by Holmes and Sutcliffe, pulled the game out of the fire yesterday and won by five wickets. Scores: Northampton, 164 and 100; Yorkshire, 67 and 200 for five wickets.

The Lancashire and Essex fixture at Liverpool was abandoned and will not be counted in the championship table. Yesterday the wicket was submerged by rain.

The match between the West of England and New Zealand was also given up owing to wet grounds.

Worcester won from Nottinghamshire on the first innings. The scores were: Worcester, 187; Notts, 164.

Warwickshire got away with the first innings against Middlesex at Coventry. Warwickshire put together the respectable total of 368. Middlesex could only reply with 173.

A first innings win also went to Glamorgan against Somerset at Bath. The scoring figures were: Somerset, 68; Glamorgan, 145 for 9 wickets, declared.

Sussex and Surrey are credited with a first innings tie, both having scored 242. In the second innings Sussex scored 349 for eight wickets, while Surrey had made 194 for eight wickets when time arrived.

England Beats France

STAMFORD BRIDGE, Eng., July 30. —England defeated France in the International Athletic Meet here today, taking nine events to the Frenchmen's four victories. The point standing was 66 for England and 43 for France.

PIRATE TRIO CONTINUES TO TOP NATIONAL

Paul Waner, Harris and Barnhart Still Sailing Serenely Along in Top Place of Hitters

SIMMONS FIRST IN AMERICAN LEAGUE

Ruth and Gehrig Join Forces in Attack on Leadership—Tris Speaker Moves Up, While Cobb Slips

CHICAGO, July 30.—The merry Pirate trio of heavy hitters are still sailing along serenely at the top of the National League batting column, with a little wider gap between them and the rest of the field. Paul Waner and Joe Harris each made big gains this week, while Clyde Barnhart added one point to his percentage. If help were needed, it is not far behind, for Brother Lloyd Waner is just on the border of the first ten hitters of the league.

Riggs Stephenson, the fly chaser whom Manager McCarthy tried at third base early in the season, has recovered his batting eye out in the sun garden and has crashed through the select list.

The Reds' winning streak is reflected in their batting figures, which improved from .277 to .280. The Pirates, the only .300 team, held steady at their regular mark of .314.

Frankie Frisch is the closest to the Pittsburgh trio, with the same percentage as a week ago, .358, and three more stolen bases, making his total thirty-one. His batting mark is now thirteen points better than Hornsby, and he is fifteen hits ahead of Rogers, though Hornsby has scored five more runs.

PIRATES EASILY BEST

Like the Yankees, the Pirates are easily the best in their circuit, in both batting and pitching. Carmen Hill and Lee Meadows, the bespectacled twirlers, have won fifteen and fourteen games, respectively, with only four defeats apiece. Charley Root, of the Cubs, has sixteen victories, but has gone down to defeat nine times.

Naturally the home-run race in the National League is not as hot as the Babe Ruth-Lou Gehrig competition, but old Cy Williams, who could knock them over the fence before the days of the Jack Rabbit ball, is in the lead with twenty four-base blows.

Leading National League hitters:

P. Waner, Pittsburgh, .388; Harris, Pittsburgh, .385; Barnhart, Pittsburgh, .371; Frisch, St. Louis, .358; Harper, New York, .354; Hornsby, New York, .345; Hafey, St. Louis, .343; Farrell, Boston, .340; Traynor, Pittsburgh, .346; Stephenson, Chicago, .331.

The home-run twins of the Yankees, Babe Ruth and his pupil, Lou Gehrig, have joined forces for an attack on the league leadership in batting, which now reposes on the brow of Al Simmons, of the Athletics.

Gehrig held the honor post himself a while, with Ruth way down the column, but the home run duel with Ruth cut down Gehrig's batting percentage until Simmons shot past him. Now Babe and Lou are third and second, five and ten points, respectively, behind Simmons.

COBB SLIPS BADLY

The pace at the top grew too hot for Ty Cobb, Simmons' tutor, and he is down in twentieth place, in averages compiled today, including Wednesday's games. Tris Speaker, though, after breaking into the first ten a week ago, moved up to sixth place.

The team batting figures show that the Yankees are getting the best batting marks and the pitching ranking proves they are getting the best pitching. The Yankees have scored 103 homers, Ruth and Gehrig having thirty-three apiece of this number up to Thursday. They are more than 100 runs ahead of the next team, Philadelphia, and have more than twice as many homers as the Athletics.

Dutch Ruether and Waite Hoyt, their star left and right-hand flingers, are the top among American League pitchers. Ruether's score is eleven victories and two defeats, and Hoyt's thirteen and four. Ted Lyons, of the White Sox, has sixteen victories but eight defeats.

Bob Fothergill, Detroit's big boy slugger, who in years past has hovered around the top of the batting list, has just managed to break into the first ten this week. George Sisler is just below him, in twelfth place, with Jimmy Dykes, of the A's, in between. Sisler, whom Phil Ball has stated he might be willing to trade, only got one stolen base this week, but his total of nineteen is two better than Jimmy Tavener, of Detroit, the runner-up.

George Burns' two-bagger mark of forty-one is well along with his record total, giving the Cleveland first sacker hopes of a mark perhaps better than his season record of fifty-nine this year.

Leading American League hitters:

Simmons, Philadelphia, .394; Gehrig, New York, .369; Ruth, New York, .374; Schang, St. Louis, .371; Neun, Detroit, .370; Speaker, Washington, .369; Heilman, Detroit, .365; E. Miller, St. Louis, .364; Meusel, New York, .363; Fothergill, Detroit, .349.

VACS BEAT COLLIES IN FIRST PLAY-OFF

VANCOUVER, July 30. — Ernie Paepke's V.A.C. baseball tribe provided the first surprise of the Senior League baseball play-offs when they trounced Collingwood, 16-3, in the opening game at Athletic Park this afternoon to decide which team enters the finals against Firemen. The next game is set for Monday evening.

SEATTLE WIN TWO

LOS ANGELES, July 30.—Seattle made it six straight over the Angels today, taking both games of a double-header,

LOU GEHRIG

7-6 and 6-4. In the first game the Indians broke a 3-3 tie by clouting Dock Wright for four runs in the eighth, but "Suds" Sutherland needed the big lead, for the Angels came back with a three-run rally in their half and finally retired with the tying and winnings runs on base. Sherlock hit out a homer with bases empty in the contest.

Tribe sewed up the second game with a five-run drive on Hamilton in the third inning. Speed Martin, Coast League veteran, making a comeback, pitched the Indians to victory. He yielded only one earned run, Wally Hood hitting a home run with the bases empty in the fourth.

By winning today's games the Indians climbed to within two games of the league-leading Oaks.

ANOTHER SWIMMING RECORD SHATTERED

MASSAPEQUA, N.Y., July 30.—Another world's swimming record toppled today when Miss Adelaide Lambert, of the Women's Swimming Association, defended her title in the 300-metres medley event of the National Women's A.A.U. championship. Miss Lambert was timed 6:57 4-5, erasing her own former mark of 5:01, set last year at Philadelphia.

B. C. to Meet Manitoba in First Western Cricket Match

VANCOUVER, July 30. — Vancouver will be host to the elite of Western Canada Cricket, when the pick of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta compete here all next week in the greatest cricket tournament in the Dominion.

Two matches are scheduled each day at Brockton Point, starting at 10 o'clock in the morning. Each team meets the other twice during the week — once on the upper grounds at Brockton Point and once on the lower grounds.

British Columbia meets Manitoba in the feature match Monday on the lower Brockton Point grounds, while Saskatchewan and Alberta oppose each other on the upper grounds.

VERGT IN BAD WITH U.S.G.A.

Committee to Turn Down Application to Enter National Amateur Golf Championship, Reports State

SECRETARIAL JOB COMES UNDER FIRE

By HENRY LA FARRELL

NEW YORK, July 30.—Members of the championship committee of the United States Golf Association will turn down the application filed by George Vergt to enter the national amateur championship when they meet Monday in Cleveland, it was learned today from a reliable source.

In itself the case of the U.S.G.A. vs. Vergt does not threaten a national crisis but its background involves that old question of amateur sports—what chance has a poor boy as a national figure—Vergt is not a Bobby Jones, but he has been ranked as one of the possibilities for the amateur championship. The charge against him just as he was about ready to step out for the championship was that he had been guilty of conduct detrimental to the best interests of the game. It is a charge that might involve anything from murder to smoking in the subway, and it is the charge upon which Miss Mary K. Browne was denied the privilege of playing in amateur tournaments.

It has been broadly hinted that Vergt made himself a professional when he accepted a soft job from Edward B. McLean, Washington publisher, but the Association will not brand him publicly as a professional. Such a brand would plunge the Association into another interpretation of an amateur; and what an amateur is, the Association does not care to interpret.

As in the case of Miss Browne, it is understood the Association merely will rule that Vergt is not eligible to compete in a national amateur tournament and close the book. The attitude of the Golf Association and its sister ruling body of the polite sports, the United States Lawn Tennis Association, leans strongly at times towards the English idea that a tradesman can't be an amateur gentleman. Perhaps they don't feel that way exactly, but they make it difficult for a man who has to earn his own living.

A GOOD GOLFER

Vergt for years has been a good golfer, but he didn't have much time for it. He was a typewriter repair man in the employ of the Government and as the Government has a lot of typewriters, he had to take his golf when he could get it.

His chance came when he was offered a secretarial position by Edward B. McLean, and he started winning golf tournaments. He won so many, in fact, that some of the aristocracy of Washington golf, according to the story, became indignant at the prowess of a tradesman, that they started digging into his office hours.

They learned, it was said, that Vergt appeared irregularly at the office of his employer; that he spent most of his time playing with his employer and superintending the care of his employer's private golf course. They learned also, it was stated, that Vergt had his expenses paid by his employer when he traveled to tournaments in other cities and that he was not qualified as a business secretary. The District of Columbia Association then ruled him out of amateur tournaments in its territory, and the case came to the attention of the national body only when his entry had been filed for the national championship.

Drama of Links Seen At St. Andrews Course

Harry Vardon, Britain's Grand Old Man of Golf, in Little Episode Which Shows Fickleness of Crowds—Hardly Noticed While Great Bobby Jones Receives Plaudits of Thousands

NEW YORK, July 30.—George Trevor, in commenting on the British open, says: Britain's grand old men of golf still tee up annually in the British open. One feels that they will continue to do so until the inevitable undertaker nails 'em up in a pine-box. Indeed, they will welcome death when they can no longer qualify for golf's proudest classic. The British open is an inseparable part of their lives. Even the blistering pace set by Bobby Jones over first 36 holes at St. Andrews couldn't keep Ray, Herd, Braid and Josh Taylor from surviving for the final day's play. Vardon qualified but was forced out after the second round. At that he did better than George Duncan and Roger Wethered.

Vardon, Ray, Braid, Taylor and Herd, epitomize the bulldog spirit of the British breed. They carry on. They stick with the pace. They wear well.

What a dramatic little episode that must have been on the third green at St. Andrews, when Bobby Jones, with his retinue of 5,000 hero worshippers, met gallant old Harry Vardon, who was playing the homeward nine. This prairie-like green serves two holes. The corespondent draws a graphic picture of Vardon, conspicuous for his loneliness, swallowed up by the milling mob which swarmed in Jones' wake. What thoughts must have burned through Vardon's brain as he stood Horatius-like above his ball, arm outstretched to fend off the rabble which threatened to trample him and it underfoot. Maybe he recalled the day at Sandwich in 1911, when the thundering herd cheered him on to his sixth open championship. He was the cynosure of all eyes that afternoon. This precocious Jones boy hadn't even been heard of then. Knee high to a grasshopper, Bobby was hitting a golf ball across the Eastlake links with clubs which dwarfed him.

MERCILESSLY CRUEL

The old order changeth, yielding place to new. Sport can be mercilessly cruel. There is pathos in the picture of Vardon struggling to save his ball as the man pack surges around the latest Caesar. Few in that thrill-drugged crowd noticed Harry Vardon. Fewer still recognized him if they saw him. Vardon is too old a trooper to take this ironic twist of the wheel in anything but a philosophical vein. Quietly he puffed at his pipe as Jones holed out. Then the thrum of hurrying feet, and Bobby, with his comet-like trail of admirers, had passed him by. The silence must have shouted at him. Some day even Bobby Jones will know that stilly quiet, the silence that roars with the echoes of vanished ghosts.

While I cannot agree with the correspondent who calls St. Andrews "the hardest course in the world," I can think of no other layout which so completely expresses the spirit of golf. Generations of golfing Titans look down upon those who tee up on this historic layout. Here Tom Morris Jr., who won the open four years in succession, learned the game from his illustrious dad. Tom was the Bobby Jones of the '70's. He was younger than Bobby is now, when death cut short a winged career. They have canonized Tom, Jr., at St. Andrews. Even allowing for the handicap of the archaic ball and grotesque implements ill-adapted to the purpose of hitting it, one suspects that young Morris would have fallen before the new idol of St. Andrews. They only played thirty-six holes for the championship in Tom's day, and his lowest aggregate was 75, 74-149, at Prestwick.

ST. ANDREWS TRICKY

I can think of several American courses and half a dozen British ones which are more difficult than St. Andrews. Jones' victorious 285 demonstrates that the course can be "murdered." Imagine Bobby ringing up such an aggregate at Oakmont, Pine Valley, Lido or Inwood; Offhand I should say that Oakmont is three strokes a round harder than St. Andrews. Deal, Sandwich, Hoylake and Prestwick, to say nothing of Gleneagles, present more difficulties to the master shot maker than congenial, lovable St. Andrews. The "auld gray links" are tricky rather than unreasonably hard. At St. Andrews your score is apt to vary from the sublime to the ridiculous.

Jones' 285 is the lowest aggregate ever made either in a British or an American open championship. Prior to his amazing three days at St. Andrews, Jones was tied with Jim Braid for the record low British championship total. Braid hung up a 291 for seventy-two holes at Prestwick in 1908, while Jones duplicated that figure at Lytham St. Annes last year.

The American open low aggregate was set at 286 by Chick Evans, over the rather easy Minikahda course eleven years ago. Smiling Sarazen had a 288 at Skokie in 1922, and dour Jim Barnes a 289 over the Columbia Country Club's sun-baked fairways the year before. That completes the list of those who have broken 290 in national opens. Two amateurs, Jones and Evans, thus hold the British open and the American open seventy-two-hole records. It's up to the "pros" to don their scoring jeans and start the divots flying. Mac Smith is the professional who might give Jones a new target to shoot at.

NOT THE SAME THING

They had been married for over two years and were beginning to miss the bliss and ecstasy of their courtship.

"John," she sighed, "you have changed so. Don't you remember that once you used to say such sweet things to me? Often you would sing snatches of popular songs, but now you never do."

Her husband looked up from his paper.

"Oh, is that so?" he cried. "Then how about this?"

He stood up and sang loudly:

"'I don't care what you used to be, I know what you are today'!"

B.C. LAWN TENNIS CHAMPIONSHIPS OPEN TOMORROW

Galaxy of Stars Will Be Seen in Action at Victoria Tennis Club

Provincial Classic Draws Cream of Entries From Recent Canadian Championship—P.N.W. Sectional Series Carded — Women Contingent Strong

The thirty-sixth annual open tournament for the tennis championship of British Columbia will get underway tomorrow morning at the courts of the Victoria Lawn Tennis Club. In addition to the Provincial net championships, the Pacific Northwest sectional singles and doubles titles will also be decided.

Many outside luminaries will be seen in action at the Willows courts, and those in charge are confident that the brand of tennis will be of a much higher calibre than ever before.

Most of the players, who battled last week in Vancouver in the Canadian championship, are coming and the vanguard will arrive this morning.

Jack Wright, Canadian singles champion, and Leon de Turenne, who met yesterday at Vancouver in the championship final, are about the only two aces who will be missing from the list. Wright has to be back East for the Davis Cup tennis with Japan, while Turenne has to return to work. There are ninety entries for the men's singles.

WOMEN STARS TO COME

The officials are particularly proud of the fact, that they have been successful in persuading Carolyn Swartz, Canadian singles champion, and Edith Cross, the runner-up, to come over. Up until last night, it was doubtful if these stars would appear, but a long-distance telephone cleared up the matter.

Victoria will have all her stars in action, including Marjorie and Hope Leeming, Mary Campbell, Doreen Swayne, Bud Hocking, Marsh Gordon, Steve Jones and the McCallum brothers and it is hoped that some of the silverware will find a resting place on the Island for the coming year.

The drawing for the sectional events will be made on the courts at 9 a.m. tomorrow, and play will start immediately afterwards, continuing over three days.

Last year's tourney was held in Tacoma, where Whitcomb Quillian, of Seattle, was successful over a classy field. The famous Tacoma team of Wally Scott and Theo McDonald captured the doubles and went East in August to compete in the national doubles, where they had the hard luck to run up against Tilden and Chapin in the first round. The latter pair eventually reached the finals, where they were beaten by Richards and Williams.

NINE EVENTS

The conditions surrounding the British Columbia championships are well known to most local enthusiasts. There will be nine events, including two consolation singles and veterans' singles, and doubles. The veterans' doubles event is an innovation this year and should arouse a lot of interest among those on the other side of forty-five.

The rules of the International Lawn Tennis Federation will govern this tournament, which means that all matches, except the finals of the men's events, will be best two out of three advantage sets. J. G. Brown will officiate.

Preparations for the championships have been going on for some time, and local tennis lovers can rest assured that they will have a wonderful week in which to see the game as it is played by the experts.

OUTSIDE ENTRIES

Among the outside entrants are:

Miss Carolyn Swartz, San Francisco.
Miss Edith Cross, San Francisco.
Miss Williams, Pasadena.
Miss Louise McFarland, Pasadena.

NINE BISLEY MEN ON B.C.R.A. TEAM

TEAM IS STRONGEST FOR MANY YEARS

Victoria and Vancouver marksmen have a fifty-fifty break in the British Columbia rifle team, which will compete at the Dominion Rifle Association meet at Connaught Ranges, Ottawa, next month. Seven local shots and a corresponding number from across the Gulf will make the trip to the Canadian capital to uphold this Province. Fourteen marksmen will make the trip. C.S.M. I. Woods, of the Esquimalt Garrison Rifle Association, and Sergeant Beaumont, of the 72nd Seaforth Highlanders, of Vancouver, will join the team at Ottawa on their return from Bisley.

The team is announced as follows: Sergeant H. W. Burton, Master Gunner Collings and Private E. H. Shrosbree, of the Garrison Rifle Association; C.Q.M.S. Fyvie and Private J. H. Regan, of the 16th Canadian Scottish Regiment; Major Fred Richardson, 5th B.C. Coast Brigade, C.A., Cadet Lieutenant Wilkinson, 112th Cadet Battalion; Major R. M. Blair, Lieutenant D. B. Blair, Private T. R. Davies and Private W. H. Scoville, all of the 72nd Seaforth Highlanders; Captain C. Wilson, Lieutenant F. Gardiner and Lieutenant A. B. Maggs, of the Vancouver Regiment.

The majority of the marksmen will leave on Wednesday, bound for Toronto, where they will take part in the matches previous to going on to the big meet. Nine of the British Columbia members are Bisley men and the representation this year is one of the strongest sent from this Province for years.

The London Merchants' Cup, the premier trophy for team shooting, was won last year by the British Columbia team. This trophy was presented by the merchants of London, England, and is shot for by teams composed of eight men and a coach.

The Esquimalt Garrison Rifle Association team of last year won approximately $4,000 worth of trophies, and their team this year, being a very strong one, and three of the four being Bisley men, great things are expected of them.

EAGLES TO BATTLE SONS OF CANADA

Senior Ball Teams Will Clash at Royal Athletic Park Tomorrow —Baker to Oppose Curtis

Sons of Canada and Eagles baseball aggregations will clash at the Royal Athletic Park tomorrow at 6:15 o'clock. Manager Ross, of the feathered tribe, will use Roy Baker on the mound. The Natives are expected to use Curtis. The outcome of this game will be watched with interest as defeat for the Sons of Canada will about push them out of the running for the pennant.

WELSH DID NOT DIE IN POVERTY

Former Lightweight Champion of the World Had Property Valued at Over $100,000, Brother Says

NEW YORK, July 30.—The funeral of Freddie Welsh, former lightweight champion of the world, today was made the occasion of an announcement by his brother, Arthur Stanley Thomas of Summit, N.J., that the pugilist was well to do and did not die in poverty, as had been believed.

Thomas said his brother, whose real name was Frederick Hall Thomas, owned property in Vernon, California, for which he had refused an offer of $83,000 three weeks ago, and that he also had real estate on Long Island worth $45,000.

"'Freddie's' one great ambition," said the brother, "was to make his family independent, and he did that well. I would like to do everything in my power to change the impression that he died poor." He added that "Freddie" was the beneficiary of a trust fund under his mother's will, the income of which was ample to support him in modest circumstances.

Welsh, who was forty-one years old, was found dead in his hotel room on Thursday. His widow, from whom he had been separated, said he had died "without a cent."

Wanted—A Ball Team

In a game which proved quite an interesting struggle up to the end of the sixth innings The Colonist City League team on Friday evening ultimately took the dust of the Compos to the extent of 23 to 14. The olden time balloon ascension broke on the unsuspecting public in the seventh, to the accompaniment of much crabbing and chin music which, no doubt, succeeded to the King's taste in delaying the game while the various decisions of the umpire were argued to a demonstration. So much so that the long-suffering fans were fain to express their interest in the wordy war with long and hearty boos at the end of the game. The Compos played good ball, with every man doing his share in socking the apple. Pickup broke up the game with a home run, two men on the bags. On account of a previous one-run win the city team had claimed superiority, but no particular ownership has been made to Friday's manifestation, except only as regards the departments of hedging and overheating the atmosphere.

Wright Sculls Way to Victory Over Adams

Toronto Oarsman in Close Race with Pacific Coast Champion at Canadian Henley — Canadian Titleholder Also Registers Win in Quarter-Mile Dash in Exciting Finish in Clear Water

ST. CATHARINES, Ont., July 30.—In the finals of the senior singles of the Canadian Henley here today Joe Wright, of Toronto, defeated Frank Adams, of Vancouver, after a hard race.

Wright, who only recently returned from the English Henley, where he lost out in the Diamond Sculls through the fouling of his oar near the finish, was the favorite for the race. Adams is the first British Columbia sculler to ever reach the finals. He showed good form in his preliminary races and it was no disgrace to be beaten by a man of the standing of Wright.

A hot sun beamed out of a clear sky and there was hardly a ripple on the water when the finals were staged this afternoon. The results follow:

Senior 140-pounds—1, McGill R.C. Montreal; 2, Winnipeg; 3, Detroit; 4, Lachine. Time, 7:21.

High School fours, one mile—1, Malvern High School, Toronto; 2, Malvern High School; 3, Ottawa R.C. Time, 5:45 2-5.

Quarter-mile dash—1, Joe Wright, Jr., Argo R.C., Toronto; 2, W. E. Gilmore, Philadelphia; 3, R. J. Ingram, St. John; 4, M. Brett, St. Catharines. Time, 1:26 1-5.

GILMORE GETS JUMP

Gilmore got the jump on the others, but in ten strokes Wright had half a length lead, only to lose it to Gilmore. Brett and Ingram were rowing bow to bow. Wright was able to nose out the Philadelphian.

Senior fifteen-pound eights—1, Detroit; 2, Lachine; 3, Leander; 4, Hamilton. Time, 7:11 3-4.

Winnipeg scratched after the gruelling finish in the 140-pound event.

Championship single, final—1, Joe Wright, Jr., Argo R.C., Toronto; 2, Frank Adams, Vancouver. Time, 8:13.

Junior 150-pound fours—1, Argos, Toronto; 2, St. Catharines; 3, McGill, Montreal. Time, 8:15 3-5.

Senior eights, final—1, Wyandotte R. C., Wyandotte, Mich.; 2, Winnipeg R.C.; 3, Argo R.C., Toronto; 4, Argo R.C., Toronto.

Kearns Says Dempsey Through as Fighter

LOS ANGELES, July 30.—Jack Kearns arrived here yesterday and said that Jack Dempsey, whom he once managed and who recently "came back" with a knockout victory over Jack Sharkey, was "through."

Giving his version of the Dempsey-Sharkey battle, he said that Dempsey had nothing left but his fighting heart.

Kearns reiterated that he will continue to press his suit against Dempsey for money he alleges the former heavyweight champion owes him. He denied that there will be any reconciliation.

Tilden in Finals

CHICAGO, July 30.—William T. Tilden II, Philadelphia, and John Hennessey, Indianapolis, finalists in the national clay court tennis championship last week, will meet again, this time for the Illinois State singles title, on Sunday at Skokie Country Club.

Hennessey went to the finals yesterday by soundly trouncing Alfred H. Chapin, Jr., Hyannis, Mass., defending champion, 6-1, 6-4, 6-0. Tilden came from behind to defeat Wray Brown, of St. Louis, 3-6, 6-4, 5-7, 6-0, 10-8.

ENTRIES WILL CLOSE TOMORROW FOR CYCLE MEET ON WEDNESDAY

Intending competitors for the cycle meet to be held at the Royal Athletic Park on Wednesday are advised that entries close at six o'clock tomorrow night. Already a large number have filed their entries for the club championship, in addition to Stan Jackson, of Vancouver, present holder of the Mayor Pendray trophy. This cup must be won three times before becoming the property of the rider.

The officials for the meet will be as follows:

Referee, G. Bennett; judges, S. Thomas, A. Wills, A. H. Walker; timekeepers, C. Miner, H. Taylor; clerk of course, W. Leal, G. Etheridge; lap scorer, G. W. Robinson; handicapper, Joe Hancock; secretary, Bev. Gilson.

VISITING TARS WIN THIRD SOCCER GAME

Defeat Weakened Esquimalt Eleven 1-0 at West Victoria Park—Boys' Team Will Play Tomorrow

H.M.S. Colombo's eleven made it three straight yesterday when they defeated an Esquimalt team 1-0 at Victoria West Park. The dockers were a long way from full strength, with the result that the visitors had much the better of the play.

In the first half, which was scoreless, Wagland, of the local team, had to retire from the field with a twisted ankle. He was replaced by a member of the Esquimalt juveniles. Harris, playing inside right, registered the only score of the game when he beat Bridges with a low shot fifteen minutes after the resumption of play in the second half. P. O. Covers refereed, and the teams were:

H.M.S. Colombo—Partridge; Smith and Dobbie; Butler, Kimpton and Barlen; Tracey, Baldwin, Seils; Harris and Titsall.

Esquimalt—Bridges; Joe Watt and De Costa; Hosmer, Dunn and McVay; McWilliams, Smith, John Watt, Stewart and Wagland.

Tomorrow at Victoria West Park at six o'clock, the boys' team from the Colombo will oppose a picked junior team composed of the Five C's defence and Esquimalt forwards.

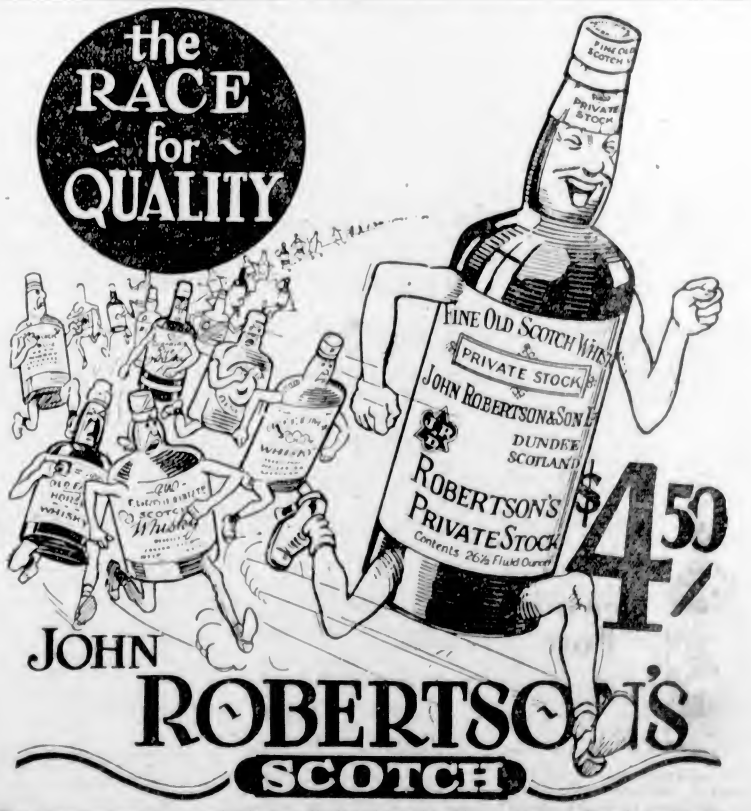

British Tennis Team Arrives at New York

NEW YORK, July 30.—The British women's tennis team arrived today from Canada to prepare for the Wightman Cup matches with an American women's team at Forest Hills, August 12 and 13. The team included Mrs. John Hill, Miss Betty Nuthall, sixteen-year-old girl, who defeated the American champion, Mrs. Molla Mallory, at Wimbledon; Miss Joan Fry, Miss Gwendolyn Sterry and Miss E. H. Harvey. Mrs. K. McKane Godfree, former British women's champion, is expected Monday.

A valuable prize to the person who estimates the nearest number for the most popular car.

Wins Maritime Title

WOODSTOCK, N.B., July 30.—T. A. McAvity, nineteen, Riverside Golf Club, St. John, is the Maritime amateur golf champion for 1927, having defeated F. R. Risteen, Fredericton, N.B., five and four yesterday on the Woodstock course.

High Scoring Features League Cricket Matches

Wenman Gets His Second Century of Season With Fine Total of 132 — Horsfall, Grant and Cobbett Each Make Over 80 Runs — Incogs. Win Again

There was some fairly heavy scoring in yesterday's league cricket matches. The University Incogs, holders of the leading position, maintained their advantage when they defeated Cowichan by 247 to 184. Victoria disposed of the Albions by 230 to 80, and the Garrison defeated the Two C's by 136 to 79.

The big totals were due mostly to high individual scores made by a few batsmen. In the match at the University School, R. Wenman made his second century of the season, and had 132 notched up against his name before he was caught by Freeman off Leney's bowling. On the Cowichan side 82 of the total of 184 were contributed by Horsfall. Of the Victoria club's total of 230 against the Albions, G. C. Grant contributed 89, and for the Garrison against the Two C's, Cobbett made 86 of the total of 136.

In the match at Mount Tolmie, the Incogs were the first to bat and their 247 was made with the loss of six wickets before they declared their innings closed. Cowichan used seven bowlers in their attempt to get the Incogs. out. Sparks and Billings shared the bowling honors for the other side, each taking four wickets for just over fifty runs.

At the Jubilee Hospital the Albions were the first to bat. They made a poor showing against Verrall's bowling and were all out for 80 while he had a bowling analysis of six wickets for 36 runs. Hoggarth bowled well for the Albions and Pite did good work with the ball in the latter part of the innings. In adition to Grant, Phillips, Gillespie Barber-Starkey and Meredith all played useful inings.

Major Cobbett's batting was the feature of the match at Work Point between the Garrison and the Two C's. In his innings for 86, he hit ten fours and one six. He was also very much on the spot with the ball, taking eight wickets for 27 runs.

Auction Analyzed

By WYNNE FERGUSON

Expert Explains Subtle Differences Between Contract and Auction

There are a number of differences between contract and regular auction, and this is especially true of take-outs of a no trump. The following hand is a good example:

h—K 8 7 6
c—J 8 7 4
d—9
c—A Q 6

Y

Z

h—Q J 10
c—A K 7 2 d—A Q 8 5
s—9 6 5

No score, first game. Z dealt and bid one no trump, the correct bid in either contract or auction. A passed and Y has a problem to consider. At auction he should bid two spades. This bid is justifiable because the distribution of the hand 4-4-4-1 is very dangerous for the no trump and is usually found to work out better at a suit bid, particularly at the suit that best fits the combined hands of the partners. At contract, however, it is very doubtful if this two spade take-out is sound or advisable. The objection is a very evident one. At contract the player should try for a game bid whenever possible, and no bid is sound that isn't based on the assumption that partner may bid for game, and for that reason the bid must be very sound and considerably stronger than usually required at auction. The suit in this instance is too weak to justify a bid and so inducing partner to bid four spades if he has more than normal assistance for that suit.

As a matter of fact, however, in this particular hand it makes very little difference, for a bid of two spades, either in contract or in auction, should be overbid by Z with two no trump. At auction this would be the final bid, but at contract Y should increase the bid to three no trump. This bid can be made, so the maximum result can be obtained in either case. The take-out, however, as explained, is very questionable at contract.

WATCH THIS ONE

Here is a hand that requires very skilful play to make game. Think it over and compare results with the analysis that will be given in the next article.

No score, rubber game. Z dealt, bid one no trump and all passed. If A opened the eight of clubs, how should Z play the hand, to go game?

AN INTERESTING HAND

One of the interesting features of contract is the proper bidding of slams. Here is a hand that offers some good opportunities:

No score, rubber game. Z dealt, bid three no trump and A passed. What should Y bid? Think this over carefully and compare results with the analysis that will be given in the next article.

The hands of the other three players will also be given and the possibilities of each one considered.

An interesting event for all auction players occurred in London, England, recently, as shown by the following:

"Properly attested evidence that four bridge players were yesterday each dealt a complete suit in one deal was published here tonight."

"On a final bid of seven spades the holder laid his cards on the table. The pack was new.

"The odds against this miracle are calculated as about 2,000 million to one, yet it has happened four authenticated times in the last forty years. It occurred at Calcutta in 1888, at Brighton in 1892, and at the Surrey Whist Drive in 1917."

CHESS NEWS AND NOTES

England—London and New York Cable Match—Under the auspices of the London Chess League and the Manhattan C. C. a six-board cable match for the Insull trophy, recently won by London from Chicago, will be played on November 5 between the modern Babylons. A conference between the secretary of the L.C.L. and Mr. M. S. Kuhns, representing the Manhattan C.C., agreed on the following arrangements and conditions of play: The six London players to be residents and the six New York players also resident in that city. The Manhattan C.C. agrees to pay the cable charges from New York to London, and the L.C.L. will pay from London to New York. Play to start at 10 a.m., New York time, 3 p.m. in London, and continue for nine hours, with an adjournment of one hour after four hours' play. All games unfinished after nine hours' play to be adjudicated. Time limit, twenty moves per hour.

Mr. Kuhn's cable code to be used, and the B.C.C. Laws of Chess, 1924, to govern the match. Any dispute to be settled by the Federacion Internationale d'Echecs.

Denmark—The Copenhagen meet resulted as follows: Maroczy, 4, 1 loss; Nimzowitsch and Ruben, 3½-1½; Anderson and Norman Hansen, 2-2.

Hungary—Kesckemet scores to date are: Alechin and Asztalos, 6 each; Kmoch, 5½; Gilg, 4½. In section B, Nimzowitsch, 6; Steiner, 5½; Vajda, 4½. Eight out of nine games per player are played.

Barry, in The Boston Transcript, shoots a shaft of light satire at the hyper-moderns and the drawing masters as follows:

"As they fought in old Madrid. A seething throng had gathered in the bull ring, awaiting with breathless anticipation the coming conflict. A crown was at stake—glory and fame to the victor. It was not a bull fight. No, no; a far more stirring contest, for at last two idols of the populace and matadors of the chess arena were face to face—Gamba and Zuka. Long had they revelled in this moment. Defiance met defiance, as with flashing eyes and corrugated brows these vaunted giants glowered at each other across the huge checkered squares pitched in the centre of the Colliseum. A sneer curled on the lip of each, for neither thought the other worthy of the boasted prowess with which he had been heralded, and awe paled the cheeks of the expectant crowd; it knew that here and now a battle to the finish was to be fought. A hush pervaded the scene. The fight was about to be begin. It started. A white Pawn had been advanced by Gamba, ye gods, to K4. A shriek—someone had fainted—possibly a shock—for only in ancient times had this move been a weapon of the chess masters of old. It awakened memories of romance—of brilliant deeds—and the amazed onlookers gave vent to their emotions in promiscuous osculation. With bated breath they awaited and yet awaited the reply to this bold advance. Zuka had lapsed into a profound study. There were only twenty moves from which he could choose. He was sorely puzzled. 'Caramba,' he murmured to himself, 'why are there so many?'

"At last with a prayer he closed his eyes and moved one of them. Great Caesar's ghost! Fifty moves hence this move would have a potent influence on the Titanic struggle. A shadow of fear crept over the face of Gamba. Well he knew the danger. The spectators were aghast, yet they knew not why. Gamba meditated profoundly. A sardonic smile replaced his pensive mien. He moved. He met the threatened menace. So these gladiators fenced and countered, subtly, adroitly, with a skill beyond the comprehension of lesser mortals, all to no avail, until at last a bull escaped into the arena, roaring and stamping the trembling earth. The crowd fled in dismay. Both toreadors grappled with the frenzied animal, and with a half nelson threw the pawing monster to the ground. The deadly fight was over. Fate had intervened. The game was forgotten in the needs of the moment. A common peril had menaced both. It was averted. A splendid emotion stirred the soul of each. They were no longer enemies, but comrades. They embraced and called the game a draw."

Mrs. Newlywed was very much distressed. Her husband had caught a bad cold, and fearing the 'flu, his wife decided to take his temperature. This she found to be rather dangerous and so she phoned the doctor.

"Hallo, doctor!" she said. "Could you come and see my husband at once. His temperature frightens me."

"What is the temperature?" asked the medical man.

"One hundred and thirty-eight," returned the woman.

"Well, I am sorry," answered the other, "but the case is beyond my skill; you'de better send for the fire brigade."

SHIRLEY The Girl Who Leaped Into Life

(Copyright, 1927.)

CHAPTER XIII

Experience — references — these were the very exclusive angels with flaming swords that seemed to guard the world of jobs effectively against trespassers from without. You had to have experience in order to get references, and without a reference, you could not get experience. No experience, no reference; no reference, no job; no job, no experience. The words made themselves into a jingle, circling upon itself in endless repetition, in time to Shirley's footsteps as she walked down the street away from the closed front door.

Yet she was baffled, rather than discouraged, and she paused on the corner to give a more thorough examination to her column of advertisements. With that curious response which our eyes often make to our thoughts, the appeals for P.B.X. operators and busheling girls sank into an indiscriminate grey background, and "Ladies — no experience necessary" flashed upon her gaze.

Why, there were quite a number of them! One, in a little box all by itself, reached out so many tentacles to the imagination that she spent the rest of the morning in following where it led, though she told herself, as she walked to Room 318, Edgecomb Building, that things couldn't really happen that way.

"Great opportunity for young men and women of adventurous temperament," it read. "Interesting proposition to limited number. No experience necessary."

Room 318 Edgecomb Building was occupied by a thin-faced man with a sharp nose and a mouth that gave an impression of equal sharpness in the transverse direction. He raised his hand for silence as Shirley entered, and examined her slowly from head to foot.

"I think you might do," he said at last. And then, without giving Shirley a chance to speak, "Are you interested in the movies?"

"Mildly," Shirley answered, chiefly because she could not think of any other response to make to this curious salutation.

"Our proposition is only for the few, the very lucky few," the sharp-faced man went on, as if her answer were irrelevant. "We are fitting out a ship to go to the South Seas and the Orient to take motion pictures. Every passenger on this ship will have not only a wonderful trip to the magic, spice-laden lands of the Far East, but will have the chance to act in the pictures we shall take—pictures not faked in Hollywood, but filmed right on the spot. By an investment of a mere thousand dollars—not enough to cover the expenses of the trip alone—those whom we choose will have the door to fame and fortune opened, the priceless chance to appear on the screen. And not only that, but by becoming stockholders in the company, they will share in the profits of the enterprise. Most of our personnel has already been made up in Los Angeles, but there still remain a few—a very few—places open, to be recruited from San Francisco."

"But I'm not a motion picture actress!" Shirley gasped. Nothing more deliberate than a gasp could be inserted between the words of this rapid discourse.

"Of course you're not," the man answered gravely and promptly. "That isn't your business—of course it isn't. Well, do you want to know what my business is? My business is to bring souls to the Lord. But I count that year lost in which I don't take a chance—a chance to make big money."

Shirley's gasp this time was entirely unpremeditated and voiceless. The Lord had been so suddenly injected into the one-sided conversation that she had some difficulty in regaining her bearings. But the exit of the Lord was as swift and sudden as His entrance.

"When I am making an investment, do you think I would go to a banker for advice? I tell you frankly, I would not. The banker talks about seven per cent—and no chances. I talk about a hundred per cent—and I take a chance. Who are the men who are rich today? The men who took chances. Look at Ford! Look at—" Shirley was requested to look at an assembled cohort, some of whose names were strange to her. There spun before her mind a whirling vision — adventurous souls, coral strands, the South Seas.

"But I haven't any thousand dollars!" she managed to interject, as the man behind the desk paused briefly for breath.

There was a moment of silence, stunning in its impact after the hail-storm of words. The sharp-faced man looked at Shirley—at her young and eager face, at her hat, at her plain, but obviously good sports coat and the glimpse of a smart little two-piece suit beneath.

"Go and get it, young woman—borrow it! It's the chance of a lifetime. You have a face that would film well—I can tell it. Five years from now you will be talking, not of a paltry thousand, but of millions."

Shirley was young and imaginative and inexperienced, but, as Allen told her in his more expansive moments of praise, she was no fool. Also she had read a good deal of assorted fiction, and some of it had dealt with the devices of promoters, of dubious enterprises. The vision of the South Seas faded. She somehow knew that motion picture actresses were not made in that fashion.

"I haven't any thousand dollars," she said again, a little more loudly, as if the torrent of his own voice might make it difficult for him to hear the voice of anyone else. "And I've got to make money, not spend it. All I want on earth is a job."

"A job," the man echoed sadly. "Yes, some people are like that. A safe little job, so much at the end of the month. But if instead of a job, you'd make a lot of money, and spend it to some good purpose—"

"I'd probably spend it to a very bad purpose," Shirley interrupted. She had a purely contrary impulse to combat these Jack-in-the-box interventions of religion in the discussion. "But that's neither here nor there. I haven't got it and I can't get it, and if I did, I've a notion I'd be very foolish to spend it that way—though I don't say I mightn't be foolish enough to do it. But if you'll just count that as settled, I'd really like awfully well to know whether you believe all this, or whether it's—what they call 'sucker bait.'"

"My dear young lady," the man's face became sad without losing any of its sharpness. "When you say a thing like that, when you take that attitude towards people, you do them wrong, and you wrong yourself. I tell you frankly, I wouldn't let anyone invest a penny with me in this enterprise. I wouldn't share my profits with any one who did not know, as I know, what what I am offering is an opportunity."

"I didn't mean to be offensive," Shirley persisted, "only I really would like to know—though of course, there's no way for me to tell."

The man's mouth was opening again, but Shirley saw it in time, and with a sense of escaping into outer calm from the midst of a whirlpool, she closed the door behind her.

"I suppose things really don't happen that way," she reflected a little sadly, as she rang for the elevator.

NORTHERN LIGHTS VERSUS THE RADIO

Interference With Reception Discussed by Expert of National Railways

MONTREAL, July 30.—"Does the aurora borealis, when in visible display, interfere with radio reception?" was a question directed to A. R. McEwan, director of radio, Canadian National Railways, in an endeavor to reach some solution of a problem which has caused a great deal of discussion. Mr. McEwan was approached because his department has unusual opportunities for observing the manifestations of the "Northern Lights," and the effect of the phenomena on reception apparatus.

During a period of three years logs have been prepared daily by operators in charge of receiving sets on Canadian National trains, an average of 120 such reports being filed each week, dealing with reception conditions across Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific, this material being obtained from the performance of sets installed on the principal trains of the Canadian National System.

Out of his own personal experience, amplified by the observations contained in the train radio logs, Mr. McEwan answered the question by saying:

"Periodic cycles of poor radio conditions have occurred recently and no doubt the aurora display has been given a share of the blame by owners of radio receiving sets. Canada being closer to the magnetic pole than most countries offers greater opportunity for the study of this effect on radio transmission. These Northern Lights are believed to be due to clouds of electrons shot off from the sun, causing ionization in the rare upper atmosphere. The aurora is generally accompanied by large disturbing currents on the earth's surface, affecting land telegraph lines and ocean cables which use the earth as a return path. These wandering currents appear to be of low frequency and, therefore, would not directly affect radio reception, such as in the case of static.

FAR NORTH REPORT

"There is on record at the headquarters of the Radio Department of the Canadian National Railways, a letter from the Federal Government agent at Fort Smith, situated on the Athabasca at the northern boundary of Alberta and the Northwest Territory, to the effect that on more than one occasion he had splendid reception at that point from CNRA (Moncton, N.B.); CNRO (Ottawa) and other stations in Canada and the United States during periods when the aurora was particularly brilliant.

"This testimony, coming from a point where there are no local disturbances of interference, is of some interest in the general discussion regarding such phenomena on broadcasting and the reception at distant places.

"One man who should know the effect of the Northern Lights on radio is Donald McMillan, who passed right under the aurora display during his trip to the Arctic and reported that it had no effect on static.

"Referring again to cycles of poor radio reception, the theory has been advanced that abnormally large disturbances on the sun have been accompanied by violent expulsions of tremendous clouds of electrons. In order to understand how radio channels may be affected when these extra electrons are shot off from the sun, we must first take into consideration the theory devised by the late Oliver Heavyside. This theory assumes that should a person ascend through the earth's atmosphere he would eventually reach a point at which the atmospheric pressure is so slight that the gas becomes a good conductor of electricity, hence a good reflector of radio waves.

REFLECTING MEDIUM

"Thus we can consider the earth as being surrounded by a reflecting medium. Near the earth is more air, which is a conductor in the daytime and an insulator during the night, because during the daytime the sun's rays ionize the air. The reflecting medium can then be considerably downward, or as being nearer the earth's surface during than it is at night, for after the sun sets deionization occurs in all the lower atmosphere and there is left the upper layer, or shell, surrounding the earth. Heavyside then assumes that radio waves guide along the inside of this shell for great distances with very little loss. The irregularities of reception are accounted for by the changes in the Heavyside layer. Changes in signal strength at a given point are accounted for in this way.

"Probably the best indication we have of the existence of this so-called Heavyside layer is the aurora borealis display. This display, as observed by the individual, may be merely an indication that the Heavyside layer, or electron-charged atmosphere, 100 or more miles above the earth's surface really exists. At any rate, whether the aurora borealis appears or not, the electrical condition of the Heavyside layer seems to affect the transmission of radio frequency waves."

The conclusions to be drawn from the foregoing are that while the aurora cannot be said to actually affect radio transmission and reception, at the same time this phenomena is at times the visible sign of other causes which do affect radio, and, therefore, there is certain relation between them.

A Billiard Match

By H. ROBERTSON

"Kissing," he remarked reprovingly, with a funny little twitch at the corner of his mouth, "is not regarded with favor in the game at billiards. It doesn't count."

He saw her fingers tremble the slightest bit as they lightly poised her cue for another stroke, and he thought how perfectly adorable she looked tonight in her fleecy pink gown, the shaded lights, reflected from the green cloth, casting a transparent luminous effect on her fair face against the darkness of the room.

She was holding the cue quite wrongly, but he couldn't help that! Five minutes before he had leant over the table beside her, placing her pretty, rounded arms just as they should be, and the tiny hand on the baize aright, and the sweetness of her had sent too sharp a pain through his heart and turned his head too dizzy. Consequently—for all the mischief in his eyes—the intrepid Captain Brandeth straight again.

No move from her for a moment, side her to put those small hands You see, she was only learning the game, and she had only known him for a week.

Then he looked up, met his keen eyes pluckily for all her little trembles, and—saw the twitch. "What is kissing?" she asked over-innocently.

His heart beat faster and faster, her eyes as rapidly dropped again, for though they had been friends for but one week it was one spent in a half-empty country hotel amongst romantic mountains and rushing streams, and the pulses of life move swift and strong so close to Nature's force.

"A kiss," he replied, so slowly, so dreamily, that the little breeze which had been whispering to Cupid and to a sprig of jasmine which climbed the open window-ledge, suddenly hushed them still to listen.

"A kiss,"—he coughed ever so slightly as if to rouse himself. "Well, Miss Graham, when you intend, as you did just them, to send your own ball from your opponent's on to the red, and your opponent's ball hits back and does it for you, spoiling your chance—that is a kiss."

"A kiss then spoils my chance. I see," she murmured, and her lips this time gave a little twist. "Please let me do that stroke over again, Captain Brandeth?"

He rolled the balls over to her, and dared to follow near enough to place hem in position.

A little low rippling laugh escaped her, to him like a distant chime of bells. It brought Cupid from the window-sill right up on to the green cloth. "It is not often a kiss spoils anything, is it?" she said demurely, trying to assure herself that she wasn't really in love with him; it was just their little fun. They were always having fun!

But he turned so quickly, his face quite white, and the next moment she felt his arms around her—.

And while Cupid, the whispering breeze, and the sprig of jasmine had been all amusing themselves, Mrs. Derwent Hood, that night's latest arrival, passed her time chatting to Miss Millings (the plain English heiress), and old Mrs. Duncan (who knew all about everything and everybody) over the drawing-room fire.

It really was early in the season, only just the end of May, to be spending one's time in a mountain-side hotel; but each lady had her own good reason, of sickness or otherwise, for being there. Mrs. Derwent Hood, a quick-witted, quick-tongued Californian, who had been enjoying herself, not wisely but too well, through a first season at Washington, was a decided acquisition!

"Is this place half empty?" she was asking, "or is the impression it gives due to the fact that I arrived after dinner?"

"We number about twelve tonight; rather more, I guess, at week-ends," said the old lady, proceeding to enumerate them on her ten fingers.

"And only three men; better place them first," Miss Millings suggested, "And be sure to begin with your favorite, Captain Brandeth."

"Captain Brandeth, did you say?"

"Yes, Captain Brandeth."

"Captain Eric Brandeth from the Embassy? Tall, dark, rather a dear?" Mrs. Derwent Hood's excitement astonished her hearers.

"The same," nodded the old lady, not sure whether "rather a dear" exactly fitted, but confident of the "tall, dark."

"Rather a dear certainly, to one lady of the household," Miss Millings acidly remarked. "It will be dear, ducky, honey, presently, judging by the rapid strides they are making. I looked in to see if Miss Brewster was in the billiard-room just now, and there they were, hanging over one billiard cue in quite a disgraceful fashion!"

"Captain Brandeth! Impossible. Why he's—I must go and see if it is the same."

"Through the green baize door at the end of the passage, last glass door to your right," called out Miss Millings after Mrs. Derwent Hood's quickly retreating figure.

She swung through the green baize door as directed; but a page boy coming from another room was ahead of her, and with descretion far beyond his years, he flung the door to the billiard-room so noisely that by the time Mrs. Derwent arrived, its occupants were calmly standing, cues in hand, on opposite sides of the table!

Eric Brandeth had hardly taken the telegram from the tray the boy handed when the "latest arrival" fell upon him.

"Mrs. Derwent Hood!"

"The gay Captain once again," she cried, as they shook hands.

"Where did you spring from?" he asked. "But excuse me one moment, this," holding up the telegram. "Probably requires an answer," and he followed the page out of the room.

"The gay Captain Eric here in this dull place!" she turned to the girl who stared at her rather strangely.

"You know Captain Brandeth?" said Beryl Graham, as it seemed necessary to say something.

"Very well indeed. I should say there was something wrong that he is to be found in this out-of-the-way place just now."

"Why just now?" slipped carelessly from the other's lips with a polite smile.

"Well, because his engagement to a friend of mine, Carrie Van Steer, was announced only three weeks ago; and it's early to be parted, isn't it?" Beryl Graham shivered suddenly.

Cupid, feeling the same chill draught, tried to tuck himself into the laces of her gown above her heart, but its coldness drove him back again to his place on the lighted cloth.

"It came as a great surprise, but we were all so glad," went on the new arrival as she saw the girl's face change color. She was one of those to whom a situation of a painful kind is as drink and meat. "We thought he would never settle down. They are old friends, and she is very rich and very lovely too."

Beyond the slight change of color, the woman could not see how deeply her thrusts had wounded her victim, who now went on carefully poising her cue and making some really neat strokes. Receiving very scant attention, her interest presently palled, so, with a few remarks about the "chilly room," she withdrew to the firelit drawing-room once more.

When Captain Eric returned not five minutes later he crept quietly to the glass door and peeped through to see "if that hateful woman," as he dubbed her always, was gone. What he saw made him creep through it still more quietly, and move to Beryl Graham's side.

She was sitting on the edge of a chair by the window, head and shoulders thrown across the sill, her forehead pressed tightly against her clenched hands, and she was telling the little sprig of jasmine all about it.

"I'm glad he didn't have time to kiss me; I led him on! That was my fault, I shouldn't have joked about it. But oh! how can I bear it. I love him, I love him so!"

Then the man who watched with throbbing pulse heard something strangely like a sob! He drew near enough to put his hands on her shoulders; but she sprang from his touch, white to the lips, and gastly even in the shaded room. He gazed astounded.

Had he known what was hurting her he would have called her a "game one," for she quickly recovered herself and smiled.

"How you startled me," was all she said.

There was something like a tear glistening on one cheek, however, and at the sight of it his heart leapt beyond all bounds.

"Little girl, my little love—what is it?" His arms went right around her this time, but again she tore herself away, and stood erect and proud.

"I'm sorry," he said, and the hurt in his heart found its way into his voice.

"You are forgiven!" she tried to laugh. "It's father my fault. I'm rather a flirt!"

His eyes fixed suddenly on hers so compellingly, so keenly, that she felt her words forcing themselves through stiffened lips. "Yes, I am, a—a heartless flirt, only—"

"I don't believe you. I believe you to be the truest, purest thing on earth!"

"Oh, no!"

There was so much pain in the cry which broke from her that he moved nearer. There seemed encouragement in her very distress.

"And, he breathed very low, "I love you."

Despairingly her arms flung out as if again to resist him. "Captain Brandeth, you are forgetting—forgetting your fiancee!"

"What do you mean? My fiancee. Oh, ho! So that is it, is it? An adorable woman, Mrs. Derwent Hood!" His face was white now. "I am sorry you should have thought——" but the sudden pitiful shiver of the slight figure before him made him pause.

"Miss Graham, in one small paper my engagement was announced quite lately, but it was a mistake. Perhaps this very opportune telegram may make matters clearer to you. The sender would tell you I have never even nearly been engaged to any woman."

She took it from him but handed it back unopened immediately. Her fair head drooped.

He hesitated a moment, watching as if to read her soul, then he said very quietly, while he gave it to her again:—

"I—want you to read it."

She moved to catch the light from the shaded lamps, leaning heavily against the billiard table. She was trembling now, and at the sight of it gladness came again into her eyes.

"My engagement to Robert announced this week in all papers," she read. "Thought it best way to rectify 'Social Weekly's' mistake. You may return from exile in safety now. Poor you! Caroline Van Steer.

"I flew here," he went on, "sick of congratulations which didn't belong, to spend a week which has turned earth into heaven for me. Beryl," he put his hand over her small shaking one, and his voice was not quite steady, "is it to be a Paradise lost or found? For God's sake tell me dear!"

She just lifted her deep, soft eyes then to his face.

"My love. Oh! may love," she breathed,—And this time he caught her very, very neatly.

For one small second only, however, before they heard the sagacious page boy tread the passage, jingling something noisily on his tray.

They took up their cues just in time as he entered the room.

"Change from the telegram, sir," he said, holding it out to Brandeth.

"Keep it, boy."

Three dollars an a beaming face disappeared through the glass door like a shot from a gun.

"Am I ever to have that kiss?" Captain Eric cried.

She ran to his open arms again with happy laughter.

"Suppose," she said with twinkling eyes as he bent his head to hers, "Suppose we go where kissing is in favour?"

How the breese and the sprig of jasmine whispered joyfully to all the garden a few minutes later, when they saw two figures, with steps so light, and faces so glowing, pass them by on the garden path.

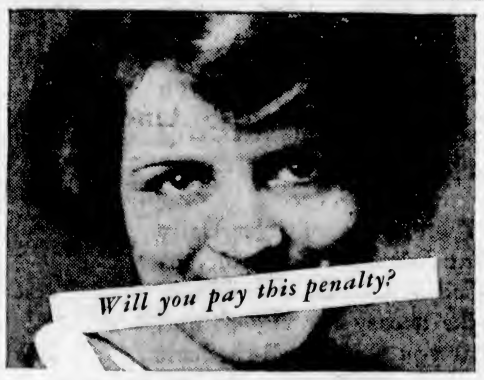

And Cupid, sitting on a billiard ball, rubbed his eyes sleepily, slid off, and went home to a well-earned rest.

Regarding the Grain Elevator By-Law

Extract from Suzuki & Co., Seattle, dated Jan. 17th, 1927, to Mr. Roger D. Pinneo:

"Inasmuch as Japanese millers prefer to mix American and Canadian wheat in the ratio of 35 to 65, it will enable us to ship this proportion, Victoria supplying the long end of the cargo, 65%. An elevator in Victoria would tend to improve our situation. We purchased this year 96,000 tons of wheat. Do not curtail the capacity of your elevator. Double this. We predict capacity business for you from the start."

Extract from Telegram from Wm. Phillips, Industrial Manager, Canadian National Railways, Montreal, July 27th:

"There is no question but that grain will be available for the movement via Victoria."

Metcalfe & Co., the architects for the Panama Pacific Elevator, are the foremost Elevator engineers in the world.

The contractors, Messrs. Smith Bros. & Wilson, are supplying a bond guarantee satisfactory to the City, which protects the City against all liens, claims, or any further liability than that involved in the guarantee provided for in the contract.

The City receives a handsome return from the Panama Pacific Co. If the Elevator handles twenty-five million bushels of wheat per year, which is the capacity of the Elevator, the City will receive from the Company $25,000 per year paid into the Civic Treasury, or a sum equal to more than half a mill on its rate.

The City is protected against all possible contingencies. It has the right to approve two Directors on the Board of the Panama Pacific Company to represent the City, and Mr. F. B. Pemberton, of Victoria, is also a Director.

The City cannot lose by reason of its guarantee, because the contract between the Dominion Government and the Company, the lease of which is to be assigned to the City, undertakes that the Dominion Government, in case of the failure of the Company to operate, will take over the Elevator at a cost to be arbitrated or adjudicated on the basis of its cost by a Judge of the Exchequer Court.

The financial position of the Company is exceptionally strong. After completion of the Elevator they will have $123,000 of their own capital as well as $200,000 working capital furnished by the Dominion Bank.

The City is amply protected against all possible contingencies in the cost of construction or against lawsuits by having complete power placed in its hands to alter and change the specifications and the plans as it may see fit, the cost of which it is agreed will be borne by the Company.

The supply of grain is beyond question. To quote the Mayor's statement on the Cold Storage Plant: "We must have the facilities first, and the traffic will follow."

Victoria's advantages over any other port are so unquestioned and unchallenged that the grain will naturally gravitate to this port. Suzuki & Company, the great Japanese grain merchants, state that the Elevator should be larger, they can tax it to capacity.

The Canadian National state in their telegram that the supply of grain seems assured. The Dominion Bank also confirm this opinion. The Company will have enough grain from its own shareholders to insure profitable operation, entirely apart from the general use of the plant from other independent interests who will seek Victoria as the most economical outlet.

Sir Henry Thornton states as follows in his telegrams:

May 13th.—"It does seem to me that it would be a tragedy if the By-Law is not passed without further argument or discussion. I hope the electors will take favorable action, and you may count upon our doing everything we can to assist in making the Elevator a success from a traffic point of view."

June 3rd.—"I am much interested in the proposal to construct the Elevator and am extremely anxious with respect to the ultimate result."

July 20th.—"I am coming to Victoria with Wm. Phillips in August to confer with you, and will do everything we can to help you upon our arrival."

July 20th.—"I have asked Weldon, our vice-president in charge of traffic, to collaborate with you in every way we can."

July 25th.—"I earnestly trust that favorable action will be taken by the citizens of Victoria in connection with the By-Law relating to the new elevator. Favorable action should mean the turning point in the progress of your city. You may rest assured that in this and all things I am taking a deep personal and official interest. The Canadian National can be relied upon to join hands with you in assisting to make the project a success. I expect to be in Victoria shortly and will at that time be glad to meet with you and contribute to anything I can towards the attainment of your aspirations."

Upon the completion of the Elevator, Victoria will automatically be placed on the same terminal grain rate as Vancouver.

The Canadian National are practically shut out from the waterfrontage of Vancouver Harbor, except under penalty of excessive tolls for the use of trackage on competitive lines. Grain can be landed in Victoria by the Canadian National at $7.00 per car less than in the elevators in Vancouver.

Empty cars in large volume are being brought to Vancouver Island continuously to load lumber. How much more economical to bring these cars loaded with grain?

It costs an 8,000-ton ship $1,680.00 in dues to enter Vancouver Harbor and load wheat. In Victoria it costs about $50.00 with a big saving in time.

Victoria occupies the key position for part parcels of grain from Puget Sound. It is the only Canadian port on the Pacific that can secure this part parcel business for Canadian grain which is now being lost to the Canadian farmer in the world's wheat markets in favor of American soft wheat.

By reason of constructing elevators on Ogden Point Piers, the cost is reduced by 50 per cent as compared with the Mainland. The cost of sites, cost of foundations, and the cost of a jetty are all saved. The present elevator which will cost about $690,000, if constructed on Burrard Inlet could not be completed for less than between one and a quarter and one and a half million dollars.

Victoria has an opportunity today to fulfill its ambition of fifty years to become a railway terminal and seaport. It has the unqualified offer today from the Dominion Bank and Sir Henry Thornton to join hands to make this a terminal grain shipping port.

SPECIAL SERVICE TO BE HELD TODAY

Rev. J. P. Westman Will Conduct the Services at Centennial United Church

Special features will mark the services in Centennial United Church today. Mrs. J. McMillan Muir, soprano soloist, of Portland, will sing "Open the Gates of the Temple" (Knapp) during the evening service. Mrs. Muir has grown up in Centennial Church and will be welcomed home by her many friends. Miss Hilda Crydeman will be the contralto soloist.

The subject at the evening service will be "The Wesley Movement." Wesley hymns and choruses will be sung and a real Wesley night will be spent. The pastor, Rev. J. P. Westman, will give an address of the movement of that time, dealing with the life and work of John Wesley. In the morning the subject will be "My Life When I Grow Up." This will be a tracing of life from its earliest up to the highest conception of man, from the early stages of being to the highly developed social structure of our time and for the future. "Some things that are necessary in the unfolding of the germs of life placed in us all," will be mentioned in the discourse, it is announced. The Sunday School will meet at ten o'clock, except the primary, which meets at eleven o'clock in the church hall.

Church Briefs

Christ Church Cathedral

The Rev. H. R. Ragg, M.A., of All Saints' Church, Winnipeg, is the preacher at both services in Christ Church Cathedral today. At the morning service the Bishop of Columbia will receive, on behalf of the Cathedral authorities, the ensign flown by H.M.S. Bristol during the war. The presentation will be made by Captain A. M. Lecky, D.S.O., commander of H.M.S. Colombo, for the British Admiralty.

New Thought Temple

Dr. A. F. Barton will speak at both services today at the New Thought Temple. In the morning he will speak on "The Christ Within" and in the evening he will speak on "Thou Shalt Not Covet." Dr. Barton will give a lecture lesson in Applied Phychology on Wednesday evening in the Temple at eight o'clock, the subject being "Cultivating a Constructive Mind."

Church Parade

A church parade from H.M.S. Colombo will parade to St. Paul's Church this morning at 10:30 o'clock.

Oak Bay United Church

The Rev. G. W. Dean will be the preacher at both services today at the Oak Bay United Church. In the morning he will speak on "The Pharisees' Failure." In the evening his subject will be "The Mistake of the Disciples" Sunday School will be held at 9:45 this morning.

First Spiritual Church

Miss Minnie Perkins will be the speaker at the First Spiritual Church, 724 Fort Street, this evening. Her subject will be "The Spirit Messages." Floral messages will be given at the close of the service.

Fairfield United Church

The Rev. R. W. Lee will preach at the morning service today at the Fairfield United Church. His subject will be "Perils of Spiritual Life and Fellowship." In the evening the preacher will be the Rev. S. S. Peat. At the morning service Mr. J. Buckler will be the soloist and in the evening Miss Isabel Pike will sing.

British Israel

The Victoria branch of the British Israel World Federation will meet on Monday evening at 8 o'clock in the King's Hall, 571 Yates Street. Mr. E. E. Richards will give a lantern lecture on "The Great Pyramid," with special reference to the recent earthquake in Palestine.

St. John's Church

There will be an early morning service at St. John's Church today, consisting of Holy Communion at 8 o'clock. The Ven. Archdeacon Laycock will preach at the morning service and the rector, Rev. F. A. P. Chadwick, will preach at the evening service, which will be preceded by an organ recital by Mr. G. J. Burnett.

St. Paul's Presbyterian Church

The Rev. J. S. Patterson has returned home from a holiday Up-Island. He will conduct both services today at the St. Paul's Church. In the morning he will speak on "As I Live, saith the Lord." In the evening he will offer his pulpit tribute to the life character of the late Rev. Joseph McCoy, D.D.

Victory Temple

The Rev. A. W. McLeod will be the speaker at the evening service today at the Victory Temple, 1406 Douglas Street.

St. Martin's Church

The Ven. Archdeacon Laycock will be the preacher at St. Martin's Church this evening.

Emmanuel Baptist Church

The management of the Emmanuel Baptist Church has taken a bold step on closing the church on Sunday evenings during the absence of the minister, Rev. Henry Knox, who is on his annual holiday. It has been felt that the tendency of later years on the part of the church-going people is to spend Sunday evenings in the woods or by the seashore, or in long drives into the heart of the Island, and as an experiment are trying out the once-a-day service. The plan is to hold Sunday School from 9:45 to 10:45, and the usual morning service from 11 to 12:15 o'clock. It is hoped by this means to concentrate a large attendance at the morning service. Dr. L. Howard, a retired English Methodist minister, will officiate at this morning's service.

Kilauea Subsides

HILO, Hawaii, July 30.—The great volcano Kilauea, after several weeks of activity, is apparently subsiding. Volcanologists said today that the flow of lava had virtually ceased.

Steam vents in the Halemumu crater continue very active, however, and some glow is still visible at night.

PUBLIC LIBRARY IS EXTENDING SERVICE

Commissioners Appoint Miss Tressa Pollock, B.A., as Reference Librarian

At a meeting of the board of commissioners of the Victoria Public Library, held on Friday evening, plans for increasing the service of the reference department were discussed. It is the desire of the board to make this department of the greatest poesible use to the business people of Victoria, and to the students at the High Schools and Victoria College.

Miss Tressa Pollock, B.A., University of British Columbia; B.L.Sc., University of Washington, has been appointed full-time reference librarian. Miss Pollock is a Victorian, and has had several years' teaching experience in the high schools of this province. Since graduating from the School of Library Science, University of Washington, she has held the post of reference librarian at the Public Library, Boise, Idaho.

Miss Pollock will commence her duties on September first.

Sir William Guy Granet Retires From Midland

LONDON, July 30.—Sir William Guy Granet is retiring from the chairmanship of the London, Midland and Scottish Railway, which position he has occupied since 1924. Sir Guy has been a prominent railwayman for nearly forty years. Sir Joseph Charles Stamp, president of the executive of the railway, succeeds Sir Guy as chairman of the railway.

STILL GOING STRONG

Somehow or other the parachute refused to open and its occupant felt himself tearing through the air at a dreadful speed.

His comrades picked him up half an hour later, placed him on a stretcher, and started for the hospital.

On the way he recovered consciousness. He gazed at the sky overhead and felt the swaying motion as he was carried. He looked at his wristwatch.

"My stars!" he gasped. "Half an hour and I ain't landed yet!"

Christendom the World Over

A Weekly Review of Religious News

After seventeen years of preparation, the Conference on Faith and Order will convene next week in Lausanne, Switzerland. Composed, as it will be, of 500 representatives of eighty-six nation-wide communions, it more nearly resembles an ecumenical council than any religious gathering since the Reformation. Almost all the churches but the Roman Catholic will be there, and in the beautiful Lausanne Cathedral of Notre Dame will unite in Christian song and prayer. As at the Stockholm Conference on Life and Work, held in 1925, the Eastern Orthodox Churches are heartily co-operating in this gesture toward the unity of the Church of Christ. The Conference is the farthest step in the movement towards drawing together the various communions of Christendom, a movement which has expressed itself in the World's Missionary Conference in Edinburgh in 1910, the Grindelwald and Murren gathering promoted by Sir Henry Lunn, the Call to Unity of the Lambeth Conference of the Anglican Churches, the organization of the World Alliance for Promoting International Friendship through the Churches, and then, the epochal Stockholm Conference two years ago.

ON FUNDAMENTALS OF FAITH

Very much the same constituency as that which convened at the gathering in Sweden will be found during the coming month in Switzerland; but while the activities of the Church were on the table then, the present assembly will consider the basal convictions regarding Christianity and its expression in worship and administration. Seven great themes will form the pivotal points of what is bound to be a most illuminating series of discussions. They are: "The Call to Unity," "The Church's Message to the World—the Gospel," "The Nature of the Church," "The Church's Common Confession of Faith," "The Church's Ministry," "The Sacraments," "The Unity of Christendom and the Relation Thereto of the Existing Churches."

There will be no attempt, it is earnestly affirmed by the leaders, to formulate a creed or even outline a possible basis of union. The attitude is that of an exploration of each other's faith by means of a frank and full exposition on the part of every one of the eighty-six denominations of its own particular point of view. It is expected that in an atmosphere of goodwill and united worship the symposium of convictions will lead to a better understanding which may open the door to a closer approximation to the Christian ideal of unity within Christ's Church. The opening sermon will be preached by Bishop Brent, the Episcopal Bishop of Western New York, who visited Victoria some Summers back, and who has been unceasing, along with the late Robert H. Gardiner, of Boston, in this attempt to heal the wounds of Christendom. The generous financial backing given by the American churches is freely asknowledged by the English Christians through Principal Dr. A. E. Garvie, himself also a visitor on the Coast about ten years ago.

PASSES PRAYER BOOK

Under the presidency of the venerable and venerated Archbishop of Canterbury, the Assembly of the Church of England, by a total vote of 513 to 133, passed the Composite Prayer Book Measure. This goes to Parliament for acceptance or rejection as it stands; no amendments can be made. Of the thirty-eight bishops, four registered against the measure, the Bishops of Birmingham, Norwich, Worcester and Exeter; in the House of Clergy 253 voted for and thirty-one against, and in the House of Laity 230 for and ninety-two against. The majority in the laymen's vote is less than among the clergymen. Dr. Davidson reviewed the book as suited to the present-day circumstances of the church and as framed to unite all devout minds in the church, apt as things stand to get out of touch with one another, and restrain, because it makes them needless, the vagaries of independent ministrants. Confidence in episcopal authority and wisdom was urged by several speakers. Sir W. Joynson Hicks, the Home Secretary of the Baldwin Government, was critical of the measure as not certain to check Anglo-Catholic practices. The Bishop of London appealed for the Anglo-Catholic vote in that under the new book reservation for the sick was permitted and prayers for the departed.

BRIEFLETS FROM MANY LANDS

"No living man holds a more honored place in Evangelical Christianity than Gipsy Smith" was Lloyd George's message to the huge gathering recently held in London which eulogized the magnificent service given during fifty years of evangelism by this world-famous preacher and singer of the Gospel. The Gipsy sang a hymn of his own composition.

A religious revival is reported from various sources to be spreading in Russia. Various kinds of evangelical organizations have come into being enlighting hundreds of thousands of members. Penetrating the factories and barracks, the movement is said to be causing concern to the Soviet Government in that the 29,000 members of the "Anti-God Society" have proved unable to stem the religious tide.

Five Presbyterian Churches have united in the production of the New Church Hymnary which appears in September after five years of preparation, New Zealand, Australia and South Africa assisting the Scotch committee. The pitch of the singularly rich and numerous tunes has been lowered in order that a larger number of the congregation may join in.

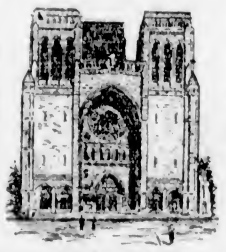

Premier Baldwin ventured the other day on the statement that John Wesley was "a much greater man in his influence on English life than any Prime Minister that ever lived." In this connection it may be noted that the Methodist Magazine, which is appearing in a new form, announces itself as "the oldest magazine of the world."

Bidding the undergraduate body of 1,700 students and the graduating class of 273, to enter with whole ardor "into the slavery of the common good" and asserting his own belief in "entire good will, coupled with entire equality," President Johnson was recently inaugurated as head of Howard University in Washington, the national centre of higher learning for the Negroes, Dr. Johnson being himself the first Negro president of this institution. To obviate any possible clash on account of race or color prejudice in some parts of the country, the Congregational Council at Omaha resolved to hold none of the gatherings in any place where it would be impossible to entertain all members of the Congregattional fellowship, including, it is implied, the Negroes.

Teachers in French secondary schools have been instructed to find a place in the curriculum for Scripture lessons in which the Biblical documents are to be treated as a part of the people's spiritual inheritance.

A community church for the common use of United Churchmen, Presbyterians, Luthrans and Anglicans has been built at Yahk, B.C. The interior is furnished suitably for Anglican worship, the pulpit being removed to the centre for United Church worship, and the Lutheran, if he requires, has the Crucifix instead of the Cross.

Admiral Rogers Takes Passengers and Crew of Ss. Admiral Watson and Transfers Them to Ss. Queen

SHIP IS ASHORE ON IVORY ISLAND

Salvage King Is Expected to Reach Scene Early This Morning — Tug Lorne to Help in Salvaging

SEATTLE, July 30.— Passengers and crew of the steamer Admiral Watson, which grounded on the shoals off Ivory Island, Millbank Sound, have been taken from the island by the Admiral Rogers and transferred to the Ss. Queen en route to Seattle, advices said tonight.

The Admiral Watson carried fifty-five passengers. Its crew was reported to number forty-five. The ship ran aground in a heavy fog near Prince Rupert, B.C., while proceeding from Southeastern Alaska to Seattle. Calls for help were answered immediately by the Admiral Rogers, proceeding nearby in the opposite direction. The latter ship stood by to give aid and, if advisable, take the grounded ship's passengers and crew aboard. Rather than attempt to transfer the passengers in the heavy fog, officers of the Admiral Watson decided they should be rowed ashore on Ivory Island.

The steamer Queen, proceeding south from Alaska, is due in Seattle Monday.

The salvage steamer Salvage King and the tug Lorne, out of Victoria, are speeding to Ivory Island to attempt salvage of the grounded steamer.

The Admiral Watson was built by the Craig Shipbuilding Yards at Toledo, Ohio, in 1901. She is a steel screw steamer with a registered tonnage of 2,009 tons. Her length is 253.1 feet; breadth, 38.4 feet; depth, 22.8 feet. She is well known on the Coast.

This is the second casualty to vessels of the Pacific Steamship Company on this coast during the last two months. The company's motor freighter Challamba went aground on Whitecliff Island June 18, sustaining a broken back.

Marine Notes

The Pacific Steamship Company's vessel, President Grant, is expected here at 6 o'clock Monday morning inbound from the Orient with 200 tons of Oriental goods. Her passenger list includes 116 first class, ninety-eight second class, thirty-two third class and 351 steerage.

R.M.S. Empress of Asia, inbound from the Orient, will dock at Pier 2, Rithet Docks, about 6.45 o'clock this morning.

Mr. J. B. Hunter, Federal Deputy Minister of Public Works, who arrived here on Friday from Ottawa, yesterday morning made a trip of inspection to the William Head quarantine station, accompanied by Mr. J. P. Forde, District Engineer of Public Works.

The Furness Pacific Limited ship, Pacific Commerce, three days ahead of schedule from the United Kingdom, is expected here some time Monday.

The freighter Vestalia will arrive some time today ready for Monday morning loading of lumber, according to advices received by King Bros.

The Japanese steamer Montreal Maru will report at William Head quarantine station from the Orient in the early part of the afternoon.

The Union Oil Company's tanker Coalinga arrived at 9 o'clock last evening from California to fill the oil tanks at Esquimalt.

The United States war fleet will be at Port Angeles from August 1 to 5 inclusive and from August 15 to 19 inclusive, it has been learned here.

The time used is Pacific standard for the 120th Meridian west. It is counted from 0 to 24 hours, from midnight to midnight. The figures for height serve to distinguish high water from low water. Where blanks occur in the tables, the tide rises or falls continuously during two successive tidal periods without turning.

The height is in feet and tenths of a foot, measured from the oversea level at lower low water.

Rushed to Assistance of Admiral Watson

SS. SALVAGE KING

The Salvage King is expected to arrive today at Ivory Island, near Prince Rupert, where the Admiral Watson of the Pacific Steamship Company's fleet ran aground at midnight on Friday. She is closely followed by the Admiral Rogers and the tug Lorne, both proceeding to the scene.

With 400,000 feet of lumber taken on here, the Willapa sailed at noon yesterday for Los Angeles.

The Sechart Fisheries' new seine vessel Faith of Sechart is at Rithet Docks having the engine installed.

Sale of the steamships West Helix and Westmount to a new corporation represented by Robert W. Malone, of Washington, D.C., for the lump sum of $310,000, has been authorized by the Shipping Board, according to advices received here yesterday from Washington.

Captain Thomas Drake, an Englishman who went to the United States many years ago and became an American citizen, has just completed a voyage alone across the Atlantic from Charleston, S.C., to Plymouth, in a small eight-ton schooner-rigged motor boat, the Pilgrim. The whole of his long journey was accomplished by sail.

With the 1927 salmon fishing season now in full swing, Washington is still without a state fisheries board, the body which for the last six years has been the controlling official organization for the industry.

There has been no legal board since June 15, the date set by the Governor in announcing that he had accepted the resignations of E. A. Sims, chairman, and E. P. Blake and Harry Ramwell, other members.

It was announced yesterday that August 27 has been selected as the date for the special election of the Anacortes port district, when the plans for port development, prepared by the Anacortes Port Commission, will be presented to the voters.

After being delayed by storms and heavy ice floes off the Siberian coast for three weeks and threatened with a shortage of fuel oil, the Seattle steamship Santa Ana of the Santa Ana Steamship Company, is expected to leave Eust, Siberia, Sunday for Seattle with one of the most valuable cargoes of mild-cured king salmon ever routed to the port.

The new B-C pier, opened recently at Vancouver by the Canadian Pacific, is one of the largest piers in the world, two of the largest ocean liners being able to berth on each side of the pier. One of the most outstanding features of the pier is the large amount of space for freight handling. Aside from the area of roadways, there are about 225,000 square feet of floor area which is available for freight handling purposes, and the capacity of the eight tracks on the pier is sufficient to accommodate a total of 200 cars at once, or eight twenty-five-car freight trains. The pier is 1,100 feet long and 313 feet wide.

Hartbridge Collides With Steamer Lehigh

PHILADELPHIA, July 30.—The British steamship Hartbridge, bound for San Francisco, was badly damaged last night in a collision at Marcus Hook, Pa., with the United States Shipping Board boat Lehigh. The Lehigh was bound for Leith, Scotland.

The Hartbridge was forced to return here today for repairs to the steel plates around her bow, which were badly bent. The Lehigh was undamaged.

MECHANICAL FISH NEW DEVELOPMENT

German Inventor Studies Fish and Designs Strange Boat With Similar Propulsion

German inventors seem determined to provide the world with something novel in the way of ship propulsion, says a Home Journal. First they provided the rotor ship, and now according to a recent issue of the Berliner Tageblatt, the methods used by fish in swimming are to be imitated to drive ships through the water. This does not mean that the steamer of the future will be provided with fins and a tail, for, according to the underlying theory, it is the water expelled from a fish's gills which has most effect upon its speed. The sponsor of this novel idea, Mr. Boerner, bases his hypothesis upon long study of their anatomy and habits, which led him to assume that, as faster moving fish possessed more gills than their slower fellows, there might be some connection; in fact, that it was not coincidence, but cause and effect. Proceeding on this line, he decided that the expelled water sliding along the body provides a medium between it and the resistance it would otherwise meet, fins and tail being used merely for balancing or steering purposes, and possibly to impart the initial forward movement.

Possessing the courage of his convictions, he constructed a motorboat having a length of nine metres and fitted with a motor of six horsepower. In general features the craft possessed little in common with orthodox design, her under-water body following closely that of a fish with propeller mounted in a funnel shaped opening in the bow. Its function is to impel the propeller stream through a series of openings in either bow, and thus reproduce as closely as possible the action of a fish when breathing. Experimental runs with this boat have done much to establish the accuracy of Herr Boerner's theory, for the little vessel moved very easily and with slight water disturbance, and it might well happen that the underlying principle may have an effect upon the ship of the future.

Of course, there is a wide gulf between a body form designed to prove a predetermined supposition and one which could be applied to the needs of commerce, but everything must have a beginning, and the first essential was a test of the accuracy or otherwise of the underlying principle. Certainly, there is nothing new in the use of a streamlined body to reduce resistance; it was done in all the old clippers. The term "cod's head and mackerel tail" applied as description of a ship's form, clearly indicates its fishy origin or resemblance. But the need of carrying power has, in the past, ruled out the possibility of true stream lining from practical application, and there is no reason to suppose that there will be a reversal practice in favor of the new invention. Certainly, its adoption to purely racing craft, where speed is all that matters, might be justified, but to impel a stream of water along the side of a cargo carrier might well produce an effect the reverse of that intended.

A Square Plan House of English Design

By W. Stuart Pavey, Architect

THIS home is of the popular square plan type and equally popular English domestic architecture. The former has an economical influence on cost while any architect will tell you that "English domestic" can be relied upon for delightful appearance.

Is there not a refreshing contrast between such a bright and distinctive hooded entrance and the dreary, light obstructing veranda approaches to the majority of our thresholds. Compare, if you will, the difference in character between this attractive lantern light fixture and the common, bargain day, globular beacon we all know. Other interesting features closely associated with this entrance are the narrow, latticed window which is equally effective from the inside and the stone number plaque over the door.

The shutters, window box and lattice are painted a bright blue, creating a pleasing bit of diversion from the white, marble dashed stucco of the walls. The number plaque is also painted blue with the exception of the cut-in figures which are left in the natural stone finish.

Dipped cedar shingles in four shades of brown with ten per cent red, laid staggered, entice the eye to the very peak of the roof where in the same region it will find further interest in the chimney top. The cement cap is painted black and the tile pots a bright red.

Passing on for a brief review of the floor plans, you will find that all rooms have desirable dimensions and are exceedingly well looked after from the viewpoint of light.

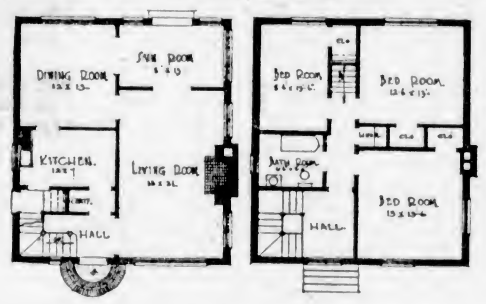

The living-room is thirteen feet by twenty-one feet, and has an open fireplace with blue tile hearth. The mantel and all wood trim is finished in white enamel. The sunroom, eight feet by thirteen feet, is separated from living and dining-rooms by double glazed doors and there is also another similar door between the latter rooms. This means that all the necessary light and cross ventilation for the dining-room is provided by only having openings in one outside wall. The kitchen is twelve feet by seven feet and the window and sink are quite properly placed co-relatively.

Ascending the attractive stairway with its mahogany stained rail, white newels, risers and trim and black treads, we find on the second floor a bright square plan hall. This could be used for a sewing-room, or in a pinch, an extra bedroom, as there is a door between it and the bedroom hall. A modern appointed bathroom and three good-sized bedrooms with clothes closets complete the accommodation on this floor, but there is also a maid's bedroom in the attic.

Including hot air heating, the approximate cost of this home is $8,300.

Readers desiring further information regarding the plans and specifications for this house should communicate with the architect direct. Address, W. Stuart Pavey, 380 Richmond Street, London, Ont.

Leaks, and How You Can Avoid Them

The basement walls may not lose much heat, but they often are responsible for great loss of temper, especially so when when cracks develop, water seeps in, and the basement looks as though it were time to call all hands to man the pumps. These inundations tax our pocketbooks every time they come along. The wall cracked because the footings were not wide enough, or the builder did not start them on sound and undisturbed soil, or, perhaps, you tried to save a few sacks of cement or used unclean sand or gravel in a moment of misguided economy.

EXTRA CEMENT FOR WATER-PROOFING

Probably the best waterproofing compound is more cement. Certainly it is better to throw a few extra sacks of it into the wall than to suffer the consequences of a flood. When there is a real waterproofing problem, how much wiser it is to have it solved before you build than afterward!

Midway in the construction of the home the plumber, heater and gas fitter come along. They string pipes through the walls and floors, and afterwards the plasterer seals them in. You trust that they will be faithful and silent, for a garrulous plumbing system that creaks and leaks at every joint, or just one for that matter, is one of the foulest of the leaking fiends. Mortal fibre cannot withstand a leaking plumbing system. What makes plumbing leak? Poor piping will do it —poor jointing between these pipes. A quality job of piping means money. We must pay for it or we do not get it. Every home builder is faced with the problem of whether he will pay ten per cent more for a good job when he builds his house or run the risk of a fifty per cent replacement and damage charge later on. It takes a skillful man to make a steam-tight joint in piping. A joint in water pipes is easier to make, but no matter what kind of a piping system it is, inspect it thoroughly before it is plastered in and test the joints by putting pressure on them. Then you can seal them up. Don't forget them and then seal them up.

FURNACE SMOKE SHOULD GO UP FLUE

All these leaks that come from heating plants and flues are unnecessary. A home builder came to us a few days ago and said that he must reduce the cost of his new home, and that he was convinced the way to do this was to use a different kind of a warm air furnace than he had selected. He found he could save almost $150 by taking the cheapest plant to be found. After all a furnace was only a stove with a bit of sheet metal around it and pipes to the various rooms. How could there be $150 difference in real value in this equipment? It was promptly shown him that it was a matter of leaks. That $150 difference could be quickly dispatched in extra laundry bills, extra doctor bills, extra coal bills.

One of the surest things ever said about home building is that you pay for good materials whether you get them or not. Why not get them in the first place?

"FERROGENE" The Perfect Anti-Corrosive Paint

Ferrogene is impervious to air and moisture; it is elastic, and therefore resists extremes of temperature. It adheres closely to the surface, and consequently protects whatever it covers with a "corrosion-proof" skin, which preserves its life almost indefinitely.
Ferrogene is easily applied and is economical, firstly, for its exceptional covering power, and secondly, for its great durability.

Londoners Badly Disappointed When Rain Makes Pall That Obscures Eclipse—Music Lovers Enjoy Two Treats—Royal Reception for Duke and Duchess—Air Force Display at Hendon Certain to Attract Many Thousands of People

By ELIZABETH MONTIZAMPERT

LONDON, July 1.—(By Mail).—London is divided these days into people who have seen the eclipse and people who did not. Among the latter are people who bitterly regret what they missed. I heard an elderly woman say that she had been up all night in the vain hope of seeing anything from London, and that she would regret her altruism in refusing an offer to be motored up to Yorkshire until the end of her days. Over London, the rain made an impenetrable pall, and, with brief intervals, it has been coming down ever since.

Nothing seems to impede the season's momentum. I hear mothers with debutante daughters complaining that they are out at dances five nights a week, and, since the best of the operatic, concert and picture show attractions are usually reserved for the season, life is a continual struggle to fit forty-eight hours' engagements into twenty-four.

I had the luck to see "Turandot," and listened to the coldly beautiful voice of Florence Easton in what I think will soon be ranked as Puccini's greatest achievement. Over here, one seldom hears of any connection with Canada in regard to Miss Easton. The general idea seems to be that she is an English girl married to a Canadian, and few people appear to know the fact that she owes much of her success to the encouragement she received in Toronto.

In "Turandot" she has found a role that suits her perfectly. Puccini has taken the story of a beautiful, cold-hearted Chinese Princess who has her suitors executed if they cannot answer the riddles she puts to them. An unknown man gives the right answers, but Turandot's humiliation is so great that he gives her a loophole by offering to die if she can find out his name by daybreak. Turandot is preparing to torture a slave girl who refuses to divulge her master's name, because she loves him, when this new aspect of love so impresses the hard-hearted Princess that she yields, and the opera ends, as all good operas should, in a lovers' embrace. The music is delicate and the stage settings a pageant of beautiful color, far more lovely than "Madame Butterfly." If only the opera season were not so short, "Turandot" would be certain to have a long run.

A few nights later came another musical treat in the concert given by those two well-known artists, Jelly d'Aranyi and Myra Hess. Miss d'Aranyi is a niece of Joachim, and both she and her sister, Madame Adela Fachiri, have won a unique place in the hearts of London concert-goers. I had heard Adela Fachiri for the first time when she played a few nights earlier at a musicale given by Mrs. Alfred Bossom, and realized that both sisters are on the same plane. Of neither of them does one use the banal phrase "to play the violin." They do not "play" their violins, they take possession of them and use them as a tangible instrument whereby they evoke floods of delicious music and noble harmonies, which are completely satisfying in a way never accomplished by less gifted musicians. The Wigmore Hall was crowded on Monday night, and the two artists had to respond many times to the enthusiasm of their audience.

DUKE RETURNS

Into all this tourbillion of dance and music came the Duke and Duchess of York last Monday. Elderly clubmen, who shake their heads over Bolshevism as they sit in their window arm-chairs, must have been pleased at the reassuring elements to be found in that home-coming. Standing on the gravel of Carlton House Terrace, in a steady downpour of rain, one overlooked the Mall, thickly lined on both sides of its long length by a happy crowd, perfectly oblivious of the drenching rain in their enthusiasm for a certain little blue-clad figure who, every mother in the crowd realized, was hurrying home to her baby.

With the usual unselfishness of the Royal Family, the Duke and Duchess refused to put up umbrellas, and drove up the Mall, smilingly responding to the vociferous cheers that told them how glad the British public is to see them safely home again. The Duchess met her baby at Buckingham Palace and then drove over to her new home in Piccadilly. The crowning moment, as far as the public were concerned, was when the happy parents brought their baby girl bareheaded out on the balcony to wave her little hand to the enthusiastic crowd.

Major Lessore has, in an incredibly short space of time, made his tiny showrooms, in Bruton Place, just off Bond Street, one of the most worthwhile picture galleries in London. With fine discrimination, he has built up a reputation for exhibitions that really matter. The show that opened yesterday will add to this reputation, for Major Lessore is giving his patrons the pleasure of seeing a collection of eighty-two pictures by the famous artist, William Nicholson. It is five years since there has been any collected exhibition of Mr. Nicholson's paintings, and, since about two dozen of the pictures now on show have been lent by their owners, Major Lessore has provided a wonderful opportunity of seeing inaccessible works by this great painter. The amazing versatility that is only displayed by the very great is seen in Mr. Nicholson's treatment of a masterpiece in technique like the Dutch figure, or, indeed, any of the many canvases of still life, the masterly portraits, such as that of Miss Clough, lent by Newnham College, Mrs. Stafford of Paradise Row, or Sir William Beveridge, and the amusing picture of "Miss Jekyll's Boots," lent by Sir Edwin Lutyens.

VISITORS ENTERTAINED

Overseas visitors are being entertained in a most charming and appropriate way by their English hosts. It was, perhaps, indicated that the Duke of Northumberland should entertain the delegates of the Imperial Education Conference, as he is the brother of Lord Eustace Percy, so this afternoon the delegates will be able to see over one of the few remaining great houses on the outskirts of London. If the rain does not cease, they will probably spend most of the time in the vast house, with the Percy lion on the stone archway, which was taken from the old Northumberland House, torn down fifty-three years ago when Northumberland Avenue was built. One of the loveliest rooms in Syon House, the Duke of Northumberland's Brentford home, is the long library corridor, with its walls lined with books in bindings of pale gold, while, among the many pictures of historic interest is one of Henry, Prince of Wales, that romantic, historical figure whose brief career is almost forgotten.

Aeronautics are taking up so much attention just now that the Air Force display at Hendon tomorrow will certainly be well attended. Seventy-five thousand people went to the Hendon grounds last year, beside the vast number that saw the show from high ground outside. This year, preparations have been made to handle a crowd of one hundred thousand, and the visitors will include not only the King and Queen, but several important foreign missions.

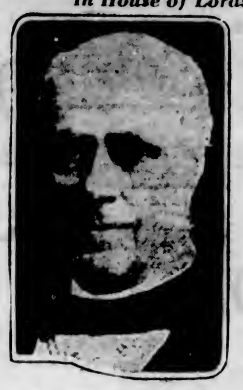

Among the features of the show, which is designed to demonstrate the progress in the work, training and equipment of the Royal Air Force, will be an aeroplane rescue of a British population from a barbaric town, where their safety has been endangered by a revolutionary mob, kept at bay by bombing and firing aircraft. There will be thirty aircraft in a battle between defenders and attackers, and among the other items will be a huge war kite balloon attacked and shot down in flames, mass manoeuvres in the air, parade of the latest and experimental aeroplanes, musical flight by radio telephony, etc., and all this with the big proviso of "weather permitting" that people in these islands seem to take with so much philosophy.

LONDON THEATRES

"The Spot on the Sun," the new play at the Ambassador, may be forgiven many defects because it not only gives us Miss Marie Tempest, but provides her with a part more worthy of her talents than any she has had lately. It seems that an enterprising manager took Mr. John Hastings Hurner by the hand and led him to Monte Carlo, where he observed the mental outlook of the frequenters of that notorious place, with the result of "The Spot on the Sun." The chief characteristics of its denizens seems to be a total lack of healthy indignation, a lack of which the charming reprobate mother seems to be dimly aware when she says to her schoolgirl daughter, who exhibits a premature phlegm on discovering her mother's somewhat hectic past, "If you are not ashamed of me, you ought to be!" I must confess that the doings of the Levantine gentleman, the "gigolo," the Baroness, and the other characters of this deliberately lurid play, have already faded from my mind. I only remember Miss Fabia Drake's very competent but rather unattractive acting as the schoolgirl, and Miss Marie Tempest's adorable portrayal of the naughty mother, which made one think of that immortal sonnet which contains the lines:

"But thy eternal Summer shall not fade
Nor lose possession of that fair thou owest;
Nor shall Death brag thou wander'st in his shade,
When in eternal lines to time thou growest."

WOMAN SUFFERED TERRIBLY

Found Relief by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. A Remarkable Case

MRS. J. L. COURCHAINE
BT. ADOLPHE, MANITOBA

St. Adolphe, Manitoba. — "I was very weak and had great pains during my periods so that I could not sweep the floor. The pains were in the right side and extended to the left and then downwards. It seemed as if the body was heavy and upside down. It is for these troubles I took the Vegetable Compound. I saw about it in a paper and one woman prevailed on me to take it. It has helped me in every way, the pains are less, and I have more appetite. It is a pleasure to recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to other women."—Mrs. J. L. COURCHAINE, St. Adolphe, Manitoba.

Found Great Relief

Toronto, Ont.—"I am at the Change of Life with hot flashes, dizziness, weakness and nervousness. I had head noises and was short of breath. I was this way about six months when I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in the newspapers. I have taken eight bottles so far and found great relief."—Mrs. R. J. SALMON, 112 Lawlor Ave., Toronto, Ont.

Mrs. Carr Also Helped

Muncie, Indiana.—"I had inflammation and the doctor said I was in a very bad condition. My hips and back felt like knives cutting me. I suffered terribly and could not get around to do my work. I had indigestion and very bad headaches and could not sleep as I was so nervous. I took local treatments and they did me no good. I had always heard of Lydia E. Pinkham's medicine and I thought it would be like all the others, but I found out after I took half a bottle as I have proved it wonderful. I am taking it yet and I can do all my work. I am feeling fine now, and it is your good medicines that have done it. I tell every woman of the good I get from taking the Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills and from using the Sanative Wash. I don't intend to be without them."—Mrs. P. W. CARR, R No. 2, Yorktown, Indiana.

Such letters prove the great merit of the Vegetable Compound. These women know by experience the benefit they have received. Their letters show a sincere desire to help other women suffering from like ailments. - C

Sun Bather Fined

Harold Hubert Vincent, forty-four, was charged in London recently with committing an act in violation of public decency at Hyde Park. Two police sergeants said the defendant was lying on a bank wearing only running "shorts." Replying to the Magistrate, the defendant said he was exposing his body to air and sunshine for the benefit of his health. He was trying to free this country from mock modesty. Mr. Cancellor fined him £5, with the alternative of twenty-one days' imprisonment. The defendant (angrily)—I pay no fine; I go to prison.

MIMIC BATTLE IN CLOUDS AS R.A.F. THRILL

100,000 Spectators Watch Wonderful Display Made by Royal Air Force at Recent Hendon Exhibition

HIS MAJESTY FULLY IMPRESSED AT SHOW

Four Squadrons Give Realistic Reproduction of Wartime Aerial Attack on London With Bombing Planes

THRILLS in the clouds at the R.A.F. display at Hendon early in July were watched by 100,000 spectators. Among those present were the King and Queen, the King of Spain, and King George of Greece and Queen Elizabeth. Foreign representatives who attended the display were amazed at the skill and efficiency of the cream of the British Air Service.

Over 200 aeroplanes of every type in use, including several models of secret design, took part. "A remarkably fine display," was the King's enthusiastic comment at the end of the programme.

A novel item was the musical ride of the air men. Ten aeroplanes, under the command of Squadron-Leader F. Sowrey, D.S.O., were the star performers. Band music was transmitted to them by wireless and each new tune meant a special aerial manoeuvre. Thus, to the tune of "Rolling Home" they lurched and rolled over the aerodrome in the giddiest fashion. "Chick, Chick, Chicken," and the squadron flew across in menacing battle formation.

Four squadrons gave a realistic picture of a daylight attack on London, and those who watched the mimic battle obtained some idea of what air warfare will be like in the future.

WONDERFUL STAGE-CRAFT

The great moment of the afternoon came when a party of Europeans were rescued by the R.A.F. from a horde of fanatical African natives. It was a wonderful piece of aerial stage-craft. First a patrolling 'plane sees the Europeans signalling from a mud fort. The observer calls up the nearest aerodrome by radio-telephony, and presently a squadron of aeroplanes appear and rout the natives.

LADY SEIGNEUR OF CHANNEL ISLAND

Woman Appointed as Ruler of Sark for Second Time in History

Mrs. Dudley Beaumont, daughter of the late Mr. William Collings, the former Seigneur of Sark, officiated recently for the first time as president at a meeting of the Chief Pleas. This is only the second time in history that a woman has held the position. Her official title is Dame de Sark.

Mrs. Beaumont, whose husband died in 1918, is the elder daughter of Mr. William Collings, who, as Seigneur of Sark, did homage for the fief to King George when His Majesty, as Duke of Normandy, visited Guernsey with the Queen on July 11, 1921. The seigneurial rights are held in Sark by two charters dated 1572. The "Fief Noble" was held direct from the King on the condition of half a knight's fee, 50s., being paid yearly, and they owed no homage to the States of Guernsey. The seigneurial rights included the sole privilege of working a mill, as well as the power of confiscation of a deceased tenant's property when there was no kin to succeed up to the seventh degree. This occurred once during the late Seigneur's rule.

OSTRICH'S VARIED MENU

Inability to Digest Four-Inch Nail Results in Interesting Disclosures in Bird's Stomach

The inquest into the death of Joshua, the noted ostrich of the London Zoo, exploded the superstition that ostriches can digest anything. They can merely swallow anything. The table of contents of Joshua's gizzard included two gloves, one marked Percy Sands; two handkerchiefs, two yards of twine, a piece of wood, a four-inch nail, which is declared to have been the cause of Joshua's demise; a lead pencil, a piece of copper wire, a photographic film spool and a metal-backed comb. The Zoo authorities announced that Mr. Sands and other owners of the property grabbed could have their belongings returned by identifying them.

HATCHED ALLIGATORS

Leicester Poultry Farmer Has Interesting Experience With Eggs Imported From Egypt

Eggs are sometimes full of surprises, as a Leicestershire farmer, Mr. B. Mellor, has just discovered. He bought a shillingsworth of eggs which were imported from Egypt. He placed them in an incubator, but when hatching time came instead of getting chickens he found four alligators. The remaining eggs were infertile, which perhaps, was lucky.

Burma University

At the University Convocation at Rangoon Sir Harcourt Butler, the Governor of Burma, announced that the Endowment Fund had reached a total of £300,000 in addition to the £100,000 offered by the Burma Oil Company for a College of Mining Engineering. The Government would spend £900,000 on building and equipping the university.

Father, Mother, Son And Daughter Die As Result of Pact

THERE are indications that the Kiddell tragedy, in which a father, mother, son and daughter of that name, who had recently come out from England to New Zealand, were yesterday found shot dead in their house in Auckland, was the result of a family pact. Letters written by the father to the police indicate the writer's intention to shoot the family and then himself on account of acute domestic trouble arising from the unwillingness of their daughter to remain in New Zealand. The daughter was highly educated and had resigned a good position at Cardiff. During the voyage from England she seemed to be on the verge of a nervous breakdown.

DINING-ROOM AND LOUNGE IN COACH

Motor Bus de Luxe Operates Between Bristol and London — Return Trips Each Day Between Two Cities

APPETIZING MENU AT MODERATE PRICE

Four motor coaches, each containing a dining saloon and a card-room lounge, are the latest development of London's luxury travel by road. The first of their type in Europe, they are owned by a Bristol firm, and they run daily, two each way, between London and Bristol, stopping at Bath. The dining saloon, which will seat eighteen persons, is in the front of the coach. The card-room lounge, with one card-table and seats for eight, is at the back. Between these is the buffet. Hot tea and coffee are supplied with the aid of an electric kettle. The dining-table is produced by pulling a tab in front of each passenger, when a glass-covered table, about two feet six inches by eight inches unfolds.

Two passengers are accommodated at one table. The lunch menu is as follows: Plate of ham or tongue, roll and butter, tomato, fruit salad, cheese and biscuits, tea and coffee. Teas are served at 1s. 9d. and 1s. 3d., and cigarettes and chocolates are supplied.

FARMERS ARRANGE TANGANYIKA TREK

Transvaal Settlers Plan Movement to Northern Territory Where Cheap Land Is Available

A number of farmers in the Wakkerstroom district of the Transvaal contemplate trekking to Tanganyika Territory, where large tracts of land can be taken up on advantageous terms.

It is stated that 5,000 acres are obtainable on a 90-year lease at £25 a year. The land is about 300 miles from the railway, but the roads are good and the soil fertile and suitable for growing coffee. Lieutenant-Colonel Botha has taken up 40,000 acres and other farmers have secured large blocks. Residence must be taken up within two years. A steamer may be chartered for the emigrants.

REJECT FREE DENTAL CARE OF CHILDREN

London County Council Hears Curious Reasons Why Parents Refuse Proffered Aid

Strange reasons are given by parents who refuse free dental treatment for their sons and daughters in the London County Council schools. One mother wrote:

"His father has had toothache all his life, so the child will have to put up with it."

Other reasons given by parents include:

"Bad teeth run in the family."

"He won't go, and I can't make him."

"What was our teeth given us but to eat with, and you want to draw them."

"I'll take her to a proper dentist when her teeth ache."

"Shock was so great in another child that it brought on scarlet fever."

"Is the child mine or the London County Council's?"

BIGGER AND BETTER PIGS

Remarkable Increase in Growth of British Porcines Noted by Expert Observers

"Is pigs pigs?" Ellis Parker Butler's famous generalization regarding porcines is in dispute by exhibitors at the eighty-sixth annual show of the Royal Agricultural Society, which opened in the magnificent park of Viscount Tredgar, at Bassaleg, near Newport, Monmouthshire, recently. "What fact has most impressed you during the last fifty years?" one of the pork authorities was asked by a visitor. "The remarkable growth of pigs," was the reply. "Today the average pig is seven inches taller than it was fifty years ago."

PORRIDGE FILLS STREETS

Fire in Johannesburg Milling Establishment Results in Mushy Thoroughfares

A street filled with boiling porridge was the sequel to a large fire at Johannesburg, South Africa. As a milling establishment was destroyed by a blaze firemen poured in tons of water, which swelled great quantities of crushed oats. This soon began to boil, burst the walls and then poured down the streets like lava from a volcano. Natives made hearty meals of the porridge.

Closing Scene at Hendon R. A. F. Display

Moth Planes Alighting Together at the Recent Manoeuvre Carried Out at London Before an Assemblage Estimated at 100,000, and which Included Five Crowned Heads.

PLAN EXPLOITATION OF DEAD SEA SALT

Ten Million Dollars Yearly Estimated as Value of Minerals in Famous Lake

Bahr Lut, or the Sea of Lot, known throughout the world as the Dead Sea, is likely to become a source of vast income.

It has always been known that this gigantic lake, measuring in some parts as much as 1,300 feet in depth, while in others no more than twelve feet, contains huge quantities of salt to such an extent that it is said that it is impossible to drown in it.

Now there is a rumor current that the British Government intends to grant a concession for the exploitation of these salts, the working of which, it is estimated, would bring in about $10,000,000 a year.

Such is the strength of the rumors that already land values are rising on the borders of Transjordania, through which railroads would have to be built to transport the salt to Haifa to the north and Ukaba to the south.

At the same time, the Arab executive has asked the British Government and the League of Nations that the exploitation of the Dead Sea salts be left to the Government of Palestine so that it may benefit the population.

FEW TRANSATLANTIC PHONE CALLS DAILY

Since Opening of London-New York Service Average per Diem Is Seven

There are only three calls daily on an average from England to the United States by transatlantic telephone, and calls to this country average only four a day on the same service. These facts were learned when a General Post Office official was asked whether the influx of Americans here resulted in increased calls to America.

The average is spread over a period from January 7, when the service opened, to June 17. During that time 485 calls have been put through to America and 612 from America. Of the outgoing calls 444 were made from London.

DUKE LOVED KIDDIES

Admiral Mark Kerr Relates Story of Childhood of Grandfather's Family Who Visited Wellington

Admiral Mark Kerr writing in Land, Sea and Air, speaks as follows of the "Iron Duke":

The Duke of Wellington was devoted to children, who were never frightened of him. Besides my mother, her brothers and sisters frequently stayed at Strathfieldsaye, and many other children also. Among her recollections and those of other members of the family, the following are interesting as putting quite a different light on the great Duke of Wellington's character from that which is generally accepted as belonging to the Iron Duke.

The luncheon table at Strathfieldsaye looked like a schoolroom table, there were so many children at it. On one occasion during luncheon the Duke had on his knee a small girl, my Aunt Sarah, who was buttering the Field Marshal's large hose, using a dessert knife as a trowel. In the middle of the young artist's work the butler announced that an Ambassador to the Court of St. James had arrived to see His Grace. The Duke ordered a chair to be put beside his, and His Excellency was asked in. He would not, however, interrupt the child in her work, and remained seated with the small girl still plastering him with butter, and, holding out his hand as the Ambassador came up, he greeted him and begged to be excused from moving, as he could not disturb the artist.

ABSURD BETS LAW

Sheffield Magistrate Stresses Apparent Unfair Regulations Governing Wagering of Money

Remarking that he believed the present betting law was absolutely illogical and absurd, Major A. J. Gainsford, a Sheffield magistrate, refused to adjudicate on a police court case. Men were charged with keeping a wooden hut for betting. It was absurd, said the Major, that a person could send bets by wire, and yet it was illegal to go to a house or a hut for the purpose of making the bets.

LORD MAYOR IS ADMIRAL

London's Chief Magistrate Resumes Ancient Rank of Chief Naval Officer

The Lord Mayor of London, Sir Rowland Blades, while looking through some musty old records, discovered that he is also an admiral. He immediately assumed the ancient role of "Admiral of the Port," his hereditary right, and journeyed in his robes of office to the Royal Albert Dock to lend official importance to the Port of London as a landing and embarkation port for passengers. He was piped aboard the liner Arandora, last of five new vessels in the London-South American service, with all the official ceremony given to an admiral of the ueet.

NABOB PURCHASES $5,000 DINNER SET

Eastern Potentate Purchases in London Complete Sterling Service for State Banquets

Stampings in sterling silver for a dinner service ordered in London by an Eastern potentate have just been completed by the Sheffield factory. The service includes every table article required for a state banquet and is estimated to be worth £1,000. Although the Sheffield factories employ highly skilled silversmiths, in this instance the stampings were sent to London for completion, as the business had been obtained by a London firm.

About twenty-five years ago the Sheffield house carried out an order, also for an Eastern ruler, for a bedroom suite in sterling silver. The work took several months and was one of the biggest orders ever executed by small silversmiths.

WOMEN ALARMED AT TELEVISION TERRORS

Lady With Fixed Telephone at Bedside Envisions Possible Complications

"What is television?"

Mr. John J. Baird, its inventor, asked a score of people this question, and these were among the replies he received:

"Sending photographs by wireless."

"Some kind of thought transference."

"A form of kidney disease."

Mr. Baird evoked considerable merriment when he read out these replies before a women's luncheon club and then proceeded to tell these "unshackled" ones television held many terrors for the "speaker" sex. However, for the benefit of those who felt nervous, he remarked that a tranmitting machine must be used "so they couldn't be seen unless they wished to be seen."

The presiding officer declared she regarded Mr. Baird's invention with certain misgivings. "I can see the day," she said, "when the Government fits every telephone with the necessary apparatus for television. Well, my own phone happens to be fixed at the side of my bed.

"I have called on a friend, and she has asked me to excuse her dressing gown, but, in the future, with television, I suppose it will be 'Excuse my curlers and natural complexion'."

GYPSY SMITH JUBILEES

Famous Romany Evangelist of England Celebrates Fiftieth Year of Religious Work

Gipsy Smith celebrated his jubilee as an evangelist at a crowded meeting in the Central Hall, Westminster, London. Messages were read from Mr. Lloyd George, the Bishop of London, the Presidents of the Wesleyan, Primitive Methodist, and United Methodist Conferences, Dr. Glover, Sir John Reith, Dr. Scott Lidgett, Sir Arthur Yapp, Dr. Campbell Morgan, the Archbishop of Melbourne, and churches in Australia and New Zealand. Gipsy Smith said it was in Whitechapel Road, at the old headquarters of the Christian Mission, in June, 1877, that he first sang and gave his testimony in public. He had previously sung to the women of the Cambridge villages when he sold them his clothes pegs. General Booth, of the Salvation Army, saw him at that gathering and called on him to sing. He afterwards asked "Will you leave your father and friends and come to us to be an evangelist?" The next day Gipsy Smith started preaching in the gipsy camp at Wanstead Flats, where he lived as a boy.

SCIENTIST INVENTS CURE FOR INSOMNIA

Sir Alfred Yarrow Discovers Great Virtue in Canadian Sleeping Cars and Proposes Exploitation

English railways jolt their passengers differently from American trains. This seems to be the conclusion, at least, of Sir Alfred Yarrow, the noted scientist, who has just invented a cure for insomnia, says The New York Times. He rode on English and European trains without finding any inspiration for the invention, but when he traveled in America the motion of the train dispelled his sleeplessness. He has, therefore, invented a bed that rocks like a Canadian Pacific railway train. He persuaded the National Physical Laboratory to construct one for him, and it is on exhibition.

The movements are arranged to occur at the rate of eighty a minute. There are special devices whereby the extent of the movements, which are to the order of three-eighths to three-quarters of an inch, can be controlled. The sleeper is rocked to sleep like a baby in a cradle or a traveler on the Canadian Pacific, and nausea is avoided by making the movements irregular.

SOLICITOR EARNS $300,000 A YEAR

Sir John Simon Possesses Largest Income and Sir Douglas Hogg Comes Second

The maximum yearly income of the great British lawyers is $300,000, according to an estimate compiled by "The London Evening Standard." This peak is touched at the present time by only one barrister, Sir John Simon.

Sir Douglas Hogg, before becoming Attorney General, was a close second. Sir John Simon, however, is far ahead of the rest of the field so far as income is concerned. Sir Edward Clarke's best year was $100,000. Norman Birkett, William Jowitt and Stuart Bevan are placed in the next rank of barristers.

CLOSE PICCADILLY

Pavement of Famous Thoroughfare to Be Replaced and Traffic Diversion Enforced

Piccadilly is up in arms. This is because it will soon be "up" in another sense.

For fifteen years past Piccadilly has not been in the hands of the roadmakers, except in patches, and their work usually has been of the tinkering variety. When driving along Piccadilly you are jolted up and down in a most uncomfortable fashion at every yard or so.

That the roadway sadly needs repair is beyond question; but the method by which the operation is to be effected is creating something like a small riot. The traffic authorities have adopted the Shakespearean idea that, if it is to be done, 'twere well it were done quickly; so the whole roadway is to be torn up at once, and Piccadilly will be closed to traffic.

Something which has never happened in London before in all its history is going to happen now. The omnibuses will run by Buckingham Palace, along the Mall and up Constitution Hill to Hyde Park Corner. The King's consent to this had to be obtained.

CELLULOID DANGERS

Housemaid Burned to Death Through Ignition of Combustible Cuffs

Danger of going too near fire while wearing celluloid collars or cuffs was emphasized by the Newcastle coroner at an inquest on Isabella Robson, a domestic. When she was attending to a fire a spark flew on to her celluloid cuffs, which blazed up and ignited her clothing. She rushed into the yard a mass of flames.

Microphones in Church

To enable the deaf members of the congregation to hear and join in the hymns and prayers a microphone has been installed in Fulham Baptist Church and headphones have been supplied certain pews to accommodate the numerous parishioners who cannot hear well.

King George and A Teddy Bear Stops Little Girl's Tears

LITTLE Annie Laurie Mackenzie was having a good cry one morning lately in the streets of Edinburgh's Pleasance district because a playmate had stolen her teddy bear.

In the midst of her tears some one patted her towseled head, asking:

"What's the matter, little one?"

It was King George, who, with the Queen, was inspecting the settlement.

The King intervened, restored the teddy bear and went his way smiling as Annie Laurie brushed away her tears and wondered who the kindly gentleman could be.

ARE GRATEFUL TO REBEL COUNTESS

London's Bohemia Recalls Late Irish Countess Markievicz as Gay, Adventurous "Connie" of Pre-War Days

ROLLED SLEEVES TO HELP SOUP KITCHEN

Bohemia in London mourns an Irish rebel against the Crown, the Countess Constance Markievicz, daughter of Sir William Gore-Booth, an English baronet, just as the Bohemia of Dublin and Paris feels a sense of loss in her passing.

The self-willed, gay, adventurous and unreasonable daughter of the British upper class who became the bete noire of British officialdom and the idol of Dublin's poor, left the memory of a charming personality among the artists, litterateurs, fanatics and poseurs who rendezvous in London, Dublin and Paris.

She wanted to be an artist and she turned into an Amazon. Now they are telling stories in Bohemia about the beauty of her girlhood, her flair for dramatics and gusto for life, and her lack of sober sense. However much the Free State and London officials feel relieved that a trouble maker costly to life and peace in her country has departed, London recalls "Connie" as Montparnasse recalls "Teuf-Teuf."

A beauty in youth, she led a sporting life in the Irish countryside, with hard riding, hard gaming, delighting in narrow escapes in the hunting field, swimming and boating. Boating was especially her hobby, as her father, Sir William, was a noted yachtsman.

Her willingness to lead lost causes which caught her heart was illustrated during notorious Jim Larkin's Dublin strike, when, with sleeves to her elbows, she cooked and served food in the strikers' soup kitchen eighteen hours daily.

WAS IN SEPOY MUTINY

Recent Death in England Recalls Suffering of Women and Children in Agra Seige

Mrs. Jane Mulholland, who died at Boston, Lincs, at the age of ninety-three, was a survivor of the Indian Mutiny, having been at Agra with her husband, Sergeant Robert Mulholland, then serving in one of John Company's regiments. The barracks were burned by the rebels, and the British were shut up in the Fort, where Mrs. Mulholland gave birth to a daughter. Suspected of poisoning the garrison's bread, the native head baker was tried by court-martial, found guilty, and hanged outside the Delhi gate.

Concerning her experience at Agra, Mrs. Mulholland told the following story:

"A crisis came at last. It was a Sunday morning, and we were ready for the church service, when we—the women and children—were suddenly ordered to the quarter guard and then to the hospital. The soldiers were present, and all had their firelocks, as we thought, in readiness for the rebels, but something far different was intended. It was feared at that time the Fort would fall; the Sepoys were expected amongst us, and our men were determined we should never fall into their hands. There was a large well in the hospital, and, rather than that the natives should take us alive, it was decided to kill us and put us down the well. Thank God, the danger passed, and we went back to our old quarters. Soon after that we were able to leave the Fort and return to the barracks, which had been partly rebuilt."

Famous London Magistrate Has Kindly Feeling for the Naughty Boy

Mr. Harold McKenna has been appointed a Metropolitan Police Magistrate in place of Mr. Thomas Scanlon. Mr. Scanlon resigned because of ill-health. He had a nervous breakdown recently, and spent six weeks in a nursing home. At present he is abroad. He was Nationalist M.P. for North Sligo from 1900 till 1918. He recently put in a word for the naughty boy. "I like a boy with a bit of devil, for he is the boy who will help to keep the Empire going," he said.

TODAY'S SOBER ARMY

Official Figures Indicate Improved Conditions Obtain in British Barrack Rooms

Testimony to the sober habits of the British soldier is contained in official figures just issued. Out of an army of 200,000 only 250 men were convicted of drunkenness last year. In former days seventy per cent of the receipts at the canteens came from beer. Now it is only seven per cent, for soldiers spend their money on teas, suppers and non-alcoholic drinks. Barracks are undergoing transformation. In some there are separate cubicles for every man, and in all there are now dining halls, hot baths, reading-rooms, libraries, writing and recreation rooms.

ENCEPHALITIS KILLS 5,000 IN LAST 5 YEARS

Sleepy Sickness Responsible for 14,420 Cases in England and Wales During Quinquennial Period of 1926

OVER THIRD VICTIMS SUCCUMB TO ATTACK

Wave Reached Highest Point in 1924, but Now Shows Subsidence, Says Minister of Health

DURING the past five years nearly 5,000 persons have died in England and Wales of epidemic encephalitis, the so-called sleepy sickness, says The London Times. During the same period 11,420 cases of the disease have been notified, so that the melancholy fact emerges that nearly half of all those stricken by epidemic encephalitis in the country have succumbed.

The fate of those who have escaped death was not referred to by Mr. Neville Chamberlain when he made his statement as Minister of Health, but a long series of researches, extending over the known "history" of the disease, suggests that recovery, in the true meaning of that word, is the exception rather than the rule. Epidemic encephalitis leaves behind it, in the majority of instances, damage to body or to brain of a more or less severe kind. As is well known, it possesses the power of transforming character, and this transformation is nearly always from good to bad. It possesses also the power of inducing that form of paralysis known as "Parkinsonism." So grave a malady merits, without doubt, the close attention of the public, especially since it seems to have become established in the country. The Minister of Health pointed out that there were 2,267 fresh notifications of epidemic encephalitis in 1926, 2,635 fresh notifications in 1925, 5,039 fresh notifications in 1924, 1,025 fresh notifications in 1923, and 454 fresh notifications in 1922. The epidemic wave, which reached it highest point in 1924, has therefore by no means subsided, though it has been reduced in magnitude.

DOCTORS DISCUSS SMALLPOX INCREASE

Royal Sanitary Institute Hears of Alarming Growth of Cases in Great Britain

Speaking at the Conference of the Royal Sanitary Institute at Hastings recently, Sir John Robertson said official figures showed that smallpox was becoming more prevalent in the Old Country every year. From fifty-one cases in 1918 the number increased last year to 10,205, and up to June this year over 10,000 cases had been reported.

Dr. F. E. Wynn (Sheffield), describing the incidence of smallpox in Sheffield since 1922, said there was no general re-vaccination of the people. The result was that while the disease was kept in check for three years there was a more serious outbreak in 1925, when a large number of persons in the area affected were vaccinated and the outbreak controlled in about three months.

Dr. C. Killick Millard (Leicester) said it was desirable that the virulent and non-virulent varieties of smallpox should have distinctive names. To use an outbreak of mild or minor smallpox to frighten people into getting vaccinated was not quite playing the game.

WEDDING POSTPONED BY OBDURATE VAULT

Tangled Lock on Vestry Strong Box Containing Marriage Documents Causes Unseemly Delay

An extraordinary predicament faced the first June bride and bridegroom at a Methodist Church in Sheffield a few weeks ago. When the contracting parties arrived it was found that the safe in the church containing the documents necessary for the wedding could not be opened because of a defect which had developed in the mechanism. A hurried search was made for a locksmith, but none could be found available in the city, where the manufacture of locks is one of the principal industries. The wedding was postponed, but the reception was held.

Not Forgotten

Lady Violet Astor, as a member of the "Not Forgotten" Association, entertained a party of disabled ex-service men at tea at 18 Carlton House Terrace one afternoon recently. The guests were brought in motor coaches from the Roehampton Surgical Hospital and the Star and Garter Hospital at Richmond. Major the Hon. J. J. Astor, M.P., was also present for a time. During the last eight years over 90,000 disabled soldiers, sailors and airmen have been entertained in this way by the "Not Forgotten Association.

New Madame Tussaud's

The new Madame Tussaud's will, it is hoped, be opened in December. It will be recalled that the old building was burnt down on March 18, 1925, after it had been one of the sights of London for almost a century. The new exhibition, which will be on the same site, will contain all the old features, and in addition there will be a cinema theatre and a restaurant.

The Other Side of the Wall

"THIS afternoon," remarked the celebrated doctor, "I have had one of the most salutary lessons of my life."

He carefully cut the end of his cigar, and his keen, sensitive face seemed unduly serious.

"You've all of you at one time or another," he went on, "felt with regard to something you've just done—'That is very good. I, personally, have done it very well. I am a big man, or, at any rate, a distinctly bigger man than my neighbor.' Of course, wild horses wouldn't drag such an admission from any of us. Should an acquaintance mention the fact of our bigness we wave a deprecating hand. But we also regard that acquaintance as a distinctly observant fellow, whose own good points we have scarcely done justice to up to date. And we strut a little, and puff out our mental chests, while the gods above laugh. They always laugh—we're so damned comical—but very often we don't hear the laughter. This afternoon, I did.

"It was two years ago almost to the day that a card was brought to me in my consulting room. The name was unfamiliar; the man had not got an appointment, and it was after my usual hours. And for a few moments I debated as to whether I would see him or not. I was a bit tired—I'd had a ticklish operation that morning—and I was leaving London next day for a month's holiday.

"I suppose my indecision was obvious as I turned the card over in my fingers, for my secretary suddenly spoke:

"'I told him, Sir John,' she said, apologetically, 'that I didn't think you would see him, and that you were going away tomorrow, but he seemed so terribly distressed that I hadn't the heart to refuse to bring you his card.'

"'Show him in,' I said, and the next moment I was shaking hands with Mr. Robert Tremlin.

Out-of-Doors Man

"He was a man of about forty—clean-shaven, and dark. He was turning a bit grey over the temples, but his whole bearing and appearance proclaimed him an out-of-doors man.

"'It's very good of you to see me, Sir John,' he said, as he sat down on the other side of my desk; 'but I really am in the most desperate trouble, and I feel I can't go on much longer. It's about my wife.

"'I don't know if you saw in the papers a fortnight ago the account of a terrible motor accident in Devonshire. At any rate, there was one, and the car in question was mine. It contained my wife, and Gerald Weymouth—a very dear friend of us both. He, poor chap, was driving when it happened. They were the only people in the car. He was taking her over to play tennis with some friends of ours who live about ten miles away, and there is one extremely bad hill to go down. What happened no one will ever know. Gerald was an extremely good driver; moreover, he had often driven the car before. Presumably the brakes failed to act, and the car got out of control on this hill. There's a turn half-way down with a couple of big trees beside the road, and into these two trees the car crashed. Gerald was killed instantly, but by some merciful act of Providence my wife was thrown clear. The car slewed sideways after the accident, and she wasn't even cut by the wind screen. She was just pitched over the door—the car was an open one—and landed on her head on the grass. And when the people from a neighboring house came rushing up they found her there, unconscious, but otherwise apparently unhurt save for a few bruises. The car was like scrap iron, and poor old Gerald was dead.

A Miraculous Escape

"'They carried her into their house, Sir John, and telephoned for a doctor and for me. By the time I got there he had already made his examination, and he met me at the door. 'A miraculous escape, Mr. Tremlin,' he said, gravely. 'Of course your wife is still unconscious, but there is no need to let that alarm you. The great thing is that there is nothing broken, and when she comes to herself again, I think we shall find that beyond a severe shaking, there is nothing the matter. Only in view of the appalling nervous shock she must have had before the crash came, I consider it would be most ill-advised to tell her of Mr. Weymouth's death. She will, of course, have to know in time, but until she has fully recovered from the shock she should be kept in ignorance of what has happened. If she asks any questions we can easily say that his leg was broken—or something of that sort—and that he has been taken to a hospital in Exeter.'

"'Can I see her, doctor?' I asked, eagerly.

"'Certainly,' he answered. 'She naturally won't know you as she is unconscious, but I repeat there is nothing to be alarmed at.'

"'So I went and saw her, and then I went out to see what remained of Gerald Weymouth, my greatest friend. Sir John; he'd been the best man at my wedding, and now . . . However, I don't want to bore you with all that; sufficient to say that it must have been instantaneous, thank God!'

"'I must come to the point.'

"My visitor moistened his lips, and I pushed over a box of cigarettes.

"'Smoke if you care to, Mr. Tremlin,' I said. 'I shall see no one else tonight.'

After the Accident

"He took a cigarette and lit it, and his hand was shaking.

"'My wife recovered consciousness the following morning, Sir John,' he went on after a while. 'I wasn't with her at the moment, but the nurse who had been sent for came and told me. We were both in the same house to which she had been taken after the accident; it belonged to friends, and the doctor didn't want her moved. I went at once to her room and found her sitting up in bed. She just stared at me blankly for a moment or two, and then turned to the nurse.'

"'Where am I?' she said. 'And who is this man? Have I been ill?'

"'I knelt down beside her, and started to explain.

"'There's been an accident, darling,' I told her. 'You're in the Ashbys' house.'

"'But she still stared at me blankly, and after a while it became obvious that I was only distressing her by remaining. So I left the room and waited until the doctor came.'

"'Did she know the doctor?' I asked him.

"Mr. Tremlin shook his head.

"She knew no one; she knows no one now. And this is where I come to the distressing part for me personally. All through this last fortnight she has shown an ever-increasing aversion to me. I may say, Sir John, without fear of contradiction, that ours has been a wonderfully happy married life. That's what makes it so hard to understand. I adore her, and I think I can say that she feels the same for me. Or rather, felt the same until this ghastly thing took place. Now she can't bear me in the same room with her.'

"'Have you any children?' I asked him.

"'None,' he answered.

"'And where is your wife now?'

"'Still in the same house with the Ashbys.'

Loss of Memory

"'Well, Mr. Tremlin,' I said, 'from what you tell me, your wife seems to be suffering from complete loss of memory. Her aversion to you is not an uncommon feature of such cases, so you may reassure your mind on that point. A dislike to those who are nearest and dearest is a frequent symptom of brain trouble, and when memory returns the feeling is blotted off the slate and vanishes like a dream.'

"'But when will her memory return?' he burst out. 'Sir John, this is absolutely killing me. A fortnight has passed, and there is no trace of improvement. Doctor Rodgers assures me that it is only a question of time, and that we can do nothing except wait. But though I have the greatest faith in him as an ordinary practitioner, a case of this sort is out of his beaten track. It stands to reason it must be. And that is why I've come to you. I was going to ask you to come down and see my wife, but your secretary tells me that you are going on your holiday tomorrow. Well, now, I've got an idea. I don't know what plans you've made, but would it be possible for you to spend a few days with me at my house? I can give you some fishing, there are four or five horses it would be a kindness for you to exercise, and there's golf. And then perhaps you could examine my wife, and tell me what you think.'

"Well, I hadn't made any plans that couldn't be broken, and the long and the short of it was that I promised to go. The poor devil was pathetically grateful, and we arranged to travel down together the next day."

The celebrated doctor blew out a cloud of smoke thoughtfully.

Extraordinarily Pretty Woman

"So much for Mr. John Tremlin; now for his wife. She was an extraordinarily pretty woman about seven years younger than he, and when you met her there was absolutely nothing to indicate that anything was amiss. Tremlin motored me over to the Ashby's house the day after I arrived—which necessitated, incidentally, going down the hill where the accident had occurred. The marks of the car on the trees were still plainly visible, and he showed me exactly where his wife had been pitched to. And, by Jove! you fellows, when I saw the gradient, and reconstructed the accident in my mind, it seemed inconceivable that she should have escaped death. However, that is by the way.

"Doctor Rodgers was waiting for us when we arrived, and he could only shake his head at my host's eager questions.

"'Just the same, I'm afraid, Mr. Tremlin.'

"He turned away wearily.

"'I'll wait for you in the car, Sir John,' he said.

"'A very strange case,' said the local doctor, drawing me into a room off the hall. 'I make no pretensions to be a specialist or expert in brain matters, but I am prepared to stake my reputation on this being no case for an operation. I can find no trace of local pressure anywhere which would account for it.'

"'A case of severe shock producing complete loss of memory,' I remarked. 'And, of course, in such cases the trouble may last for years.'

Ideally Happy Couple

"'Precisely,' he answered gravely. 'Though naturally I haven't told him so. It's pathetic, Sir John, quite pathetic. I think they were the most ideally happy couple I have ever met. His devotion to her was almost doglike, and since the accident it's really been harrowing to see the way he has suffered. With his brain he understands the reason of it; with his heart he can't understand why he, of all people, should have been signalled out for this acute dislike. Because it has turned to that now, to such an extent, in fact, that I have had to forbid him even to see her. And there's another thing, too. . . . . However, I don't think I'll mention it. I'd like to see if you notice it yourself, or whether it's my imagination. Shall we go up?'

"She was fully dressed, and as we entered the room she turned her head eagerly to look at us. As I've said, she was a strikingly lovely woman, and her whole face was lit up with anticipation. And the next second the look had completely vanished; her expression was quite lifeless again. It was almost noticeable, and I seized on it at once.

"'Good morning,' I said. 'Are you expecting someone?'

"'Yes, I am,' she answered.

"'Who is it?' I asked.

"'I don't know his name,' she replied wearily.

"'Can you describe him? Because perhaps we can get hold of him for you.'

"But she seemed to have lost interest in the matter, and I could get nothing coherent out of her at all. She submitted to my examination listlessly, and after awhile we went out and left her alone.

"'There's no mistaking it, is there?' said Rodgers. 'I thought it might be my imagination, but I've never seen it so clearly. And I've never spoken about it to her as you did.'

"'You mean that look of expectation on her face,' I said. 'If we could find out who it was and produce him, it might do the trick.'

"'Well, it's certainly not her husband,' said he, grimly. 'However, what do you make of the case?'

"I won't weary you with professional shop, beyond saying that I concurred with him over the question of the operation. I could find no trace of pressure anywhere, and I told her husband so. It was a strange case, but by no manner of means a unique one. We were up, so to speak, against a blank wall. All that she knew and remembered was the fortnight or so of her life that lay on this side of it; we had somehow to get her to the other side.

"'Is it going to be a long job, Sir John?' he asked me.

False Hopes

"'There's no good buoying you up with false hopes,' I said. 'I can't tell you. I don't know. It might be that she will waken tomorrow morning perfectly normal; it might be—years.'

"'Oh! my God!' he muttered under his breath.

"'Anyway, the first thing to do is to get her back to her own house. The familiar surroundings there may help her to get to the other side of the wall. And once we've got her there we've taken an enormous step forward.'

"So Mrs. Tremlin returned to Redlands that day, and I watched her with the greatest curiosity. In fact, that night I went to bed considerably more hopeful. She had walked, for instance, out of the hall straight into the drawing-room and sat down in the chair which, her husband told me, she generally used. She had seemed, in a way, to recognize the servants; at any rate, she had accepted them. And she had gone upstairs to her bedroom without having to be shown the way.

"But there it ended. Amazing though it seemed, she still failed to recognize her husband, and the poor devil was almost distracted. In vain to point out to him the vagaries of the brain; he couldn't get beyond the fact that there must be some glimmerings in her mind of what lay on the other side of the wall, if she could find her own bedroom. And if that was the case, why was the most important thing in her life—her marriage to him—hidden from her?

No Actual Aversion

"I think it was the second day after she came home that I found her in her husband's study. I'd had to tell him to keep out of the way as much as possible, because, although she no longer displayed actual aversion to him, his presence worried her. She had her meals with us, since my chief idea was that everything should proceed exactly as it had been before the accident. And at table she didn't seem to mind him. It was only when he got close to her that she began to get fidgety.

"And now she was standing by his desk holding a big photograph in her hand. There was a queer, excited look on her face as she turned to me, and I was instantly reminded of the first time I'd seen her.

"'Who is this man?' she said.

"As a matter of fact, the very first night I had arrived Tremlin had told me.

"'That's Gerald Weymouth,' I answered. 'Do you know him?'

"'Where is he?' she cried, taking no notice of my question. 'I want to see him.'

"'Is he the man you are expecting?' I said; 'the man whose name you forgot.'

"'I think so,' she answered, passing her hand over her forehead. 'It's all so muddy. I seem to remember. . . . . Gerald Weymouth. . . . . Gerald. . . . .

Gerald was killed instantaneously, but by some merciful act of Providence my wife was thrown clear.

"Her voice died away, and I didn't press her. To excite a case of that sort is fatal, but it started me off on a new train of thought. And that night I mentioned it to her husband.

Few Ghastly Seconds

"'It may be,' I said, 'that those few ghastly seconds, whilst the car was dashing down the hill, and she was facing what must have seemed to her to be certain death, have imprinted on her mind a recollection of him. How clear it is, I can't tell—but it's there. And if only she could see Weymouth now it might save her.'

"'Since the poor old chap is dead and buried,' he said, wearily, 'I'm afraid that doesn't advance us much, Sir John.'

"'I know all that,' I answered. 'The point is—how clear is that recollection? Would it be possible to get a substitute?'

"He sat up with the light of hope dawning in his eyes.

"'What do you mean?' he said.

"'It's only a vague idea, Mr. Tremlin,' I answered. 'And I haven't even begun to think out the details. Have you ever heard the story of the man who was driving with his servant along a road he rarely used? And as they went over a rather noticeable wooden bridge, he said to his servant—"Do you like eggs?" And the servant answered, "Yes, sir." A few months later he again drove over the same bridge, not having been on that road in the interval. And as the trap got to exactly the same spot where he had put the first question, he said, "How do you like them?" And the servant answered, "Fairly hard-boiled, sir."'

Quite Serious

"He stared at me as if I had taken leave of my senses.

"'I assure you I'm quite serious,' I said. 'Whether the story is true or not is immaterial, but it illustrates a very well-known law—the law of Inherent Connection. The second question was put under exactly similar conditions to the first, and although there was a lapse of months between the two—for the fraction of a second that lapse was non-existent in the servant's mind. Subconsciously his surroundings recalled the first question, just as the second was put to him. Now I am wondering if we could do something of that sort in the case of your wife.'

"'I'm afraid I must be very dense,' he said, 'but for the life of me I don't see what you're driving at.'

"'I'm driving at this. You'll agree that for a man to ask his servant suddenly if he likes eggs and then to say no more is a peculiar thing to do. And its very peculiarity stamped itself on the servant's mind, so that when identical conditions were repeated, it immediately came to his thoughts. Moreovre, it came in such a way, and so naturally, that his answer to the second question was quite spontaneous. Now suppose, Mr. Tremlin, we could reproduce the exact conditions which led up to the accident—let us say from the time your wife and Weymouth left the house in the car to the moment when the crash came. Only, this time there will be no crash.'

"He was staring at me fixedly now; he was beginning to get the idea.

Only an Experiment

"'Understand: it's only an experiment. It may do no good, but I don't think it can do any harm. And if it's successful, we shall have got your wife to the other side of the wall. So will come up to it, as she did on the day of the accident; but this time she will go through it and come out on the other side.'

"'Man,' he cried, 'do you think there's a chance?'

"'I certainly think there's a chance,' I said.

"'But how can we arrange about Gerald?'

"'There lies the principal difficulty, I admit. At the same time, I think it quite possible that a reasonable likeness will be sufficient for the purpose if all the other details are exact.'

"'He was wearing flannels and a big white blanket coat. And he also had on a pair of motoring goggles. By Jove! Sir John,' he almost shouted in his excitement, 'if you put on a small black moustache, I believe you could do it yourself. You're greyer, of course—but a hat conceals that; and your eyes are quite different, which doesn't matter either behind goggles. You're exactly the same height and build, and your voice is much the same as was his.'

"He was pacing feverishly up and down the room.

A New Hope

"'By gad, man!—you've given me hope. Don't let's dream of failure; don't let's even mention the word. You're going to succeed, I know it.'

"And then we set to work to discuss details. The first thing was to get another Panler car—an exact replica of the one that was smashed. He wired for that in the morning. Then we had to find out as nearly as possible precisely what took place before they started. The butler could help there, for Tremlin himself had been out for lunch. So we called him in and explained the situation.

"'I remember perfectly, sir,' he said. 'Mr. Weymouth drove the car up to the front door, which was open. He got out and entered the house, speaking to me as he passed. Mrs. Tremlin was in the drawing-room, and Mr. Weymouth went to the door and opened it. I heard him say, "Are you ready, Monica?" Then she came out and I handed her her racket and shoes as I opened the door of the car. I said to her, "Shall I put them behind, ma'am?" and she said, "Oh! it doesn't matter; there's plenty of room here." Then they drove off.'

"'A point to remember,' cried Tremlin. 'There was a tonneau cover over the back seats.'

"'That is so, sir,' said the butler.

Discussing Details

"Well, we sat far into the night discussing details, and by the time I went to bed I was as excited as he was. The whole scheme, which had started as just a vague idea, began to crystallize in my mind; I realized the possibilities. Of course, the fact that I had to play the part of Weymouth was the weak link, but during the next week, under Tremlin's direction, I managed to get his voice more or less. Also we had two dress rehearsals for appearance. We had down a man from London who was an expert in the art of making-up, and with the help of photographs, and Tremlin's criticism, he turned me into a very creditable replica of Weymouth.

"And then we had to wait for the right day. I insisted on that: it must be the same sort of weather. The day of the accident had been sunny and warm; as luck would have it we had a fortnight of dull, overcast days. The car had arrived and was being kept in the local garage, from which I had driven it once or twice to get accustomed to it.

"I had left Redlands myself, and taken rooms in the local inn, as I thought it better that Mrs. Tremlin should see nothing of me. I formed no part of her pre-accident existence, and that was the atmosphere in which I wanted her steeped.

"And then at last there came the morning when her husband burst in on me at breakfast.

"'It was just such a day as this,' he cried, and he was shaking like a man with the ague.

"'Steady, Tremlin,' I said, warningly. 'We've all got to keep cool.' And, truth to tell, I wasn't feeling too cool myself. Even with all our carefully arranged details there was still such a lot that must be left to chance. However, there was no question of backing out of it, and so we got on with our final preparations. Tremlin was in such a state of pitiful excitement and agitation that he was worse than useless: in spite of my warning he was banking everything on success. And he had the hardest part, poor devil: he couldn't be there to see what happened. The butler had been carefully coached; the whole staff had been warned just to behave normally.

"The man from London started on my face in the morning, reserving the final touches till after lunch, which Tremlin had with me. But he couldn't eat anything, and it was with a feeling of relief that I saw him go after the meal. He was getting on my nerves rather badly.

"And then at two o'clock I left and drove up to the house. Every detail in the car was correct—sidewings, two spare wheels, tonneau cover, everything. The expert from London had done his work well, for the butler gave a positive start as he saw me.

"'Magnificent, Sir John,' he whispered. 'You're the living image of Mr. Weymouth.'

"'Where is she?" I asked.

"'In the drawing-room, Sir John. I took the coffee there after lunch, as you told me.'

"So far, so good; that had been one of the many difficulties to contend with.

"'And she has on a similar dress, Sir John: her maid managed that.'

"'Excellent,' I said. 'You've got the racket and shoes? Then we'll get on with it.'

"Nervous, you fellows—I was as nervous as a cat. Would the whole thing, after all the trouble we'd taken, be a ghastly failure? However, there was no use hesitating, so I went to the drawing-room door and opened it.

"Are You Ready?"

"'Are you ready, Monica?' I said.

"It was the crucial moment, and I saw a look of dawning amazement come into her eyes, to be replaced almost at once by an expression which defeated me. At least, it defeated me in one way only: it defeated me when I saw it on the face of a woman who was devotedly attached to her husband. Except from that point of view, its meaning was too obvious.

"I stood aside, feverishly trying to think out this new and unexpected development. Then she passed me and walked quite normally towards the car. The butler was splendid: there was not a hint of hesitation in his voice as he opened the door for her.

"'Shall I put them behind, ma'am?'

"'Oh! it doesn't matter; there's plenty of room here.'

"'Gerry, darling,' she said, 'I thought you were coming to lunch. You said you would.'

"Now here was the devil and all of a predicament. I had assumed that I might have to reply to an ordinary disjointed conversation on general topics, but a love affairs, and a serious one, was a different matter altogether. And I was just racking my brains as to what I should say when she spoke again.

"'I know you couldn't help it, dear heart, but I grudge every moment you're away from me.'

"For a moment I was surprised; then I realized that once again luck was with us. She didn't require any answers from me; the answers were already there in her brain. And for the next quarter of an hour I drove in silence, listening to what to all intents and purposes was one person speaking on a telephone.

An Awful Swine

"It wasn't pleasant, I assure you. It was obvious that Mr. Gerald Weymouth had been a pretty awful swine. Certain it was that he had eaten Tremlin's salt, and then done him the greatest injury one man may do another. Certain it was also that he had had no intention whatever of sacrificing his freedom and becoming involved in the meshes of the divorce court. There was no need for his answers to be spoken aloud; they were obvious without that. His career, unnecessary scandal, poor old Bob's feelings—all the old, old stunts rattled off glibly.

"And suddenly a feeling of awe came over me. Just so had this thing happened a month previously; and even as the man I represented talked of his career, death was five minutes away from him. And then my professional instincts took charge; it was so wonderfully interesting. I hardly heard some of what she said; I was so frightfully keen to see what was going to happen when we got to the hill.

The Boyish Figure, Knees, Knickerbockers and Other Portents—Will Women Grow Masculine and Men Become Indolently Elegant?—What Science Has to Say About Racial Development and the Influence of Ancestral Instincts

By ARTHUR STRINGER

Illustrated by L. F. Wilford

ARTHUR STRINGER

Whose Thorough Knowledge of Social Conditions Is Shown in Novels and Short Stories; Author of "The Renaissance of Woman," "Barbarous Woman," "The Prairie Wife," Etc.

This social revolution of women that looms so momentous in the narrow dooryard of our present era, in fact may fail to seem so startling when inspected from the heights of historical perspective. Fundamental changes come slowly. And heavy drags the long chain of ancestral habit.

The inference that equality of rights implies equality of aspect, in fact, might flower in the naive belief that putting a ballot in a box will bring a spade-beard to a suffragist's chin overnight. The radical-minded lady may rock the boat, but Time has the habit of tolerantly trimming it for her.

Woman, in her stoker-ashore moods, may nurse a perverse and more or less impersonal admiration for the shellacked movie-shiek and the tailor-made matinee-idol. But that is merely her compensating splash of color across the over-drabness of life. And in her adolescent years she may make a good deal of fuss over the football player and the stadium hero. But this is only a sigh out of the past.

For woman, with a sagacity all her own, knows when the thrust of economic necessity is against her mate-type, just as she has come into a knowledge of those sex-differences which feed the flame of love.

THERE was a time; not so long ago, when you could tell a man from a woman. And you could do so about as easily as you could distinguish a knife from a fork. But often, today, we have to look twice at a youthful figure before we are sure whether it is male or female. And occasionally the doubt persists.

The implication seems to be that modern life is narrowing the gulf between the sexes, is tending to make the woman more manly and the man more womanly. And the sequential inference is that this tendency will persist.

But the fear, svelt lady of the shingle-bob, is quite groundless. "Male and female created He them." Man is man, and woman is woman. And such they will and must remain as long as the race continues.

The fixed tendency of evolution, in fact, has been to make the sexes more and more different, different in both character and appearance. In those exceptional cases where they have chanced to merge in mental uncertainties, in due course they have promptly enough eliminated themselves.

Types, Not Ideals

Newer overtones may come into existence, but the ancient verities remain. The pinched and pallid male lily, who minces and lisps and puts scented hair oil on his cerulean locks, is not yet the idol of the twentieth century girl, just as the towering and thick-muscled she-grenadier, the bony and brawny and thumping big giantess with a hard hand and an evident mustache, is scarcely the matrimonial ideal of the normal man of today.

We have, it is true, a disturbing memory of the Amazons, those old-time warrior women who willingly removed the right breast to facilitate their use of the bow and arrow, and temporarily dominated the destinies of the Cappadocian male. But these lusty Amazons, under the cold light of research, seem to be about as mythical as Atlas and the maenads who so blithely tore their lovers to pieces.

We have, too, the occasional historical example of a virile and vigorous-minded woman becoming a power in the state and a leader in national movements. But such women are so rare, candor compels us to admit, that they remain memorable because they stand exceptions to the general rule. Like the man biting the dog, they constitute front page news.

And we have, it must also be admitted, a momentary fashion for masculinity in line and attire on the part of a certain limited number of women. But this fashion is really the effort of the over-formalized female to torture herself into passing distinction. And she is mannish only as Hamlet was mad, in definitely restricted points of the compass; when the wind is from the northeast, you may be sure, she knows a depilatory from a shaving cream, and the Spring bonnet from a ballot box.

Labor and Womanhood

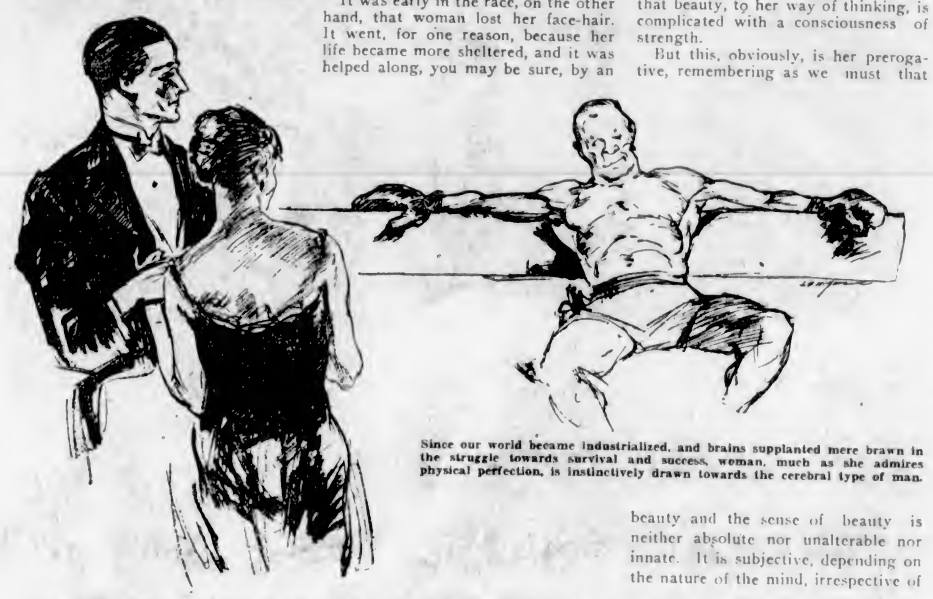

Yet occupation and environment, it is conceded, must have their due influence on both character and physique. So there are those who assert, solemnly enough, that the substitution of machinery for man-power is diminishing the virility of the male, just as emancipated woman's invasion of occupational pursuits, working side by side with man in office and shop and factory, is tending to masculinize her character and her cast of countenance.

But long before our era of engines and electric currents, woman learned to labor without entirely losing her womanhood. And since she is very neatly avoiding those occupations that demand muscularity and muscularity alone, she is likewise avoiding the threat of racial virilescence that time and fatigue occasionally bring to the feminine.

In this, of course, she differs and will differ from the mediaeval peasant woman and the North American squaw, who, through unceasing toil and drudgery, grew harsh and hard and stolid. But the woman worker of today, especially in the New World, still finds her tribal valuation reckoned along aesthetic lines rather than economic ones. It may be a good thing to be efficient; but it is fatal to be ugly.

This social revolution of women that looms so momentous in the narrow dooryard of our present era, in fact may fail to seem so startling when inspected from the heights of historical perspective.

Fundamental changes come slowly. And heavy drags the long chain of ancestral habit. The advancing civilization that tends to make the sexes more and more alike with regard to legal rights and social privileges, does not bring a corresponding similarity in physical appearance and mental make-up.

Since our world became industrialized, and brains supplanted mere brawn in the struggle towards survival and success, woman, much as she admires physical perfection, is instinctively drawn towards the cerebral type of man.

The inference that equality of rights implies equality of, aspect, in fact, might flower in the naive belief that putting a ballot in a box will bring a spade-beard to a suffragette's chin overnight. The radical minded lady may rock the boat, but Time has the habit of tolerantly trimming it for her.

"An exaggerated anxjety lest the natural law be overthrown," Havelock Ellis has written, "is misplaced. The world is not so insecurely poised. We may preserve an attitude of entire equanimity in the face of such social readjustment. For such readjustment is either the outsome of wholesome natural instinct, in which case our social structure is strengthened and broadened, or it is not. And if it is not, it is unlikely to become organically ingrained in the species."

The Bearded Woman

But, to go back to the ancestral beard. Eschricht and Darwin unite in telling us that both sexes were once bearded.

Whiskers were revered by the ancient Hebrew, honored by the early Egyptians, and solemnly respected by the old Greeks—though the latter, it is true, often represented a beardless youth as their type of ideal beauty. But Jupiter and Janus and Neptune and Hector, being men of power, were pictured for us as bearded figures.

The later Egyptians may have learned to shave for reasons of personal comfort, since it is recorded that the cootie and the tick were troublesome pests along the banks of the ancient Nile. But man's face, despite the barber and shaving cream and the safety-razor, has persisted in remaining a hairy one.

It was early in the race, on the other hand, that woman lost her face-hair. It went, for one reason, because her life became more sheltered, and it was helped along, you may be sure, by an instinctive effort to emphasize—as the dawn of civilization brought its first promises of individualization—the differences between woman and her mate. Amorous infatuation, she found, depended more and more on differentiation.

The thick-haired hunter and the bearded warrior were soon attracted by the woman whose skin was soft and smooth. They competed for her and mated with her and tended to perpetuate her type.

Instinctive Progress

So the girl of today who finds hair on her lip is a manifestly unhappy young lady, just as the youth who finds himself unable to raise a mustache, however untimely its end, is a patently abashed young man. For the old expectation that the one sex should remain the complement of the other is not easily forgotten.

We are drawn by what is different, allured by what is aloof from our own life-sphere. And out of those overtones of a basic impulse is born what we call romantic love. We may not always remember that we are groping ghosts who ride in our crowded omnibus of instinct, it may be worth while giving a moment's attention to the trend of racial feeling in the matter of male and female attributes. Take, for example, the mere question of the beauty and the sense of beauty is neither absolute nor unalterable nor innate. It is subjective, depending on the nature of the mind, irrespective of blindly for the benefits of cross-fertilization.

We have, it must be admitted, a momentary fashion for masculinity in line and attire on the part of a certain limited number, but woman is mannish only as Hamlet was mad, in definitely restricted points of the compass.

We may not know, when we find love scorning near relationships, and reaching out for its opposites and its complementaries, how shrewdly we are campaigning against the ever-threatening hereditary transmission of injurious qualities in our stock. We may not recall that we are fighting more for the race than for our individual happiness.

About all we know, at the moment, is that we have fallen in love. And it is today a pretty deeply ingrained habit, this trick of falling in love with our prospective mates. We want them because they embody, or for the time being seem to embody, our somewhat vaguely formulated ideals of beauty and functioning power.

Insuring Protection

Woman, it is true, may differ slightly from man in broadening the aesthetic grounds on which she makes her choice, by compelling it to include certain dynamic considerations, so that beauty, to her way of thinking, is complicated with a consciousness of strength.

But this, obviously, is her prerogative, remembering as we must that the object admired. But through it all flows a utilitarian current that must not be ignored.

So instinct naturally enough prompts woman to reach out for a mate capable of protecting her in those competitions of the counting house that have so generally superseded the combats of the battlefield.

Dreams of the Past

In other words, since our world became industrialized, and brains supplanted mere brawn in the struggle towards survival and success, woman, much as she admires physical perfection, is not only instinctively drawn towards the cerebral type of man, but adroitly imposes on her ideal of attractivenness a latter-day coloring of intellectuality. As always, she capitulates to the promise of power. But that attribute is no longer embodied in Berserker sinew and muscle. Since alertness of mind and grimness of will and steadiness of nerves now constitute the storage battery of modern courage, women are no longer satisfied with the mere gladiator type and the outmoded muscular dumb-bell.

She may, in her stoker-ashore moods, nurse a perverse and more or less impersonal admiration for the shellacked movie-shiek and the tailor-made matinee-idol. But that is merely the lonesome cowboy riding in to shoot up the town, her compensating splash of color across the over drabness of life.

In her adolescent years she may make a good deal of fuss over the football player and the stadium hero. But this is only a sigh out of the past, as anachronistic as the chipped arrowhead of a vanished age turned up by the busy plowshare of industrialism.

For woman, with a sagacity all her own, knows when the thrust of economic necessity is against her mate-type, just as she has come into that knowledge which feeds the flame of love.

She may, now and then, ape man in a few of his habits and imitate him in a few of his absurdities. But the similarty will always be superficial. She may bob her hair and scrap her skirts and starve herself into a flattened torso, but she will pay man the compliment of remaining complementary to him. And the two sexes, whether we like it or not, will continue to develope divergent aptitudes and cultivate opposing characteristics.

"Let the woman give whatever message she may have," a great prelate recently said, "but let her do it with all that beauty and with that sweet grace with which her Creator has endowed her.

She may even grimace, in her insurrectionary mood of the moment, at any such claim that the Creator has given her grace and charm and sweetness and other qualifications that have not been bestowed in such measure on mere man.

But despite the fluctuations of fashion and the fleeting vagaries of taste, it is worth remembering that the one fundamental thing that makes man still appealing to woman is manliness; and the one basic attribute that still fastens the affection of man upon woman is womanliness.

Fear of Growing Old

Sir Humphrey Rolleston, lecturing recently at the Royal Institution, London, made out a case for old age very different from the popular conception of it, says L. F. Ramsey, writing in The Mirror.

Speaking as a scientist, rather than as a philosopher, he showed how groundless are the common fears of old age, which is the bogey of present-day youth.

Every age seems to have some dominant fear. Our grandfathers feared the end of the world: their grandfathers went about in terror of hell fire. Youth, today, is frightened of old age.

The other day, in the debate as to which is the best age of life, the protagonist of youth is reported to have said: "I confess that there is something repulsive to me in the thought of bodily decay. . . . Youth is beautiful, old age is ugly and repellent."

This fear reacts upon the middle-aged and elderly, so that they, in their turn, are terrified of appearing old in the eyes of youth. We are no longer afraid of what grandma or grandpa might say; grandma and grandpa are so awfully afraid of what their grandchildren will say of them!

It is all the fault of those fatuous elders, who, for generations have been telling the young people:

"Ah, this is the happiest time of your lives!"

That has been repeated again and again, till at last it has been accepted as an aphorism.

"Very well," flaming youth acquiesces. "If this is the best time I'm ever going to have—not that I think much of it!—I'm going to get the best out of it."

I was once present at the dramatic reunion of two lovers, both over seventy, who had been parted for many years. When they met the years seemed to drop away from both of them: they forgot everything—surroundings, spectators, occasion alike—and were alone once more in a world that consisted of just their two selves.

There was scarcely a dry eye among those who were, say, over forty.

But the boys and girls who happened to be witnesses of the meeting—it was on the occasion of a family festival—could not conceal their disgust.

"I call it revolting," I heard one of them say to a circle of contemporaries. "Old creatures like those acting like lovers."

What was the explanation of this antagonism?

Was it not that flaming youth has formed a conception of old age in which life is dull and grey and apathetic? He dreads it, yet he cannot bear that the fever of life should persist in the old.

And yet, who was it said that life is merely a kaleidoscope? With every turn of it the colors fall into new shapes.

Flaming youth is but one of these, and old age another.

"'Why did you do it, Gerry?' Her voice suddenly arrested me. 'I used to love him so much, and now I can't bear him near me.'

"The doctor in me noted that point; the strange aversion was accounted for.

"'Of course, I disguise it—but I can't go on. You've—you've bewitched me.'

"And now we were at the top of the hill.

"Gerry—be careful. Not so fast down here. What's the matter—brakes gone? My God! Gerry turn her: turn her into the bank. . . .'

"I was letting her down pretty fast, you'll understand.

"You've Lost Your Head"

"'Turn her, Gerry.' Her voice rose to a shriek. 'Slip in a lower gear. Oh, God!—you've lost your head. Bob wouldn't have . . . Bob . . .'

"Her weight fell heavily against me—she'd fainted; the car was past the two trees. I pulled up, and laid her on the grass beside the road. Then I ripped off my disguise and brought her round. Now we should see whether it was success or failure.

"She stared at me wonderingly.

"'Who are you?' she said at length.

"'My name is Sir John Caston,' I answered. 'I'm a doctor.'

"'But what on earth . . .' she stammered in amazement.

"'Listen, Mrs. Tremlin,' I said quietly, 'and I'll explain things. You had a very bad accident some weeks ago, and were thrown out of a car on your head. Mr. Weymouth was driving you. . . .'

"'But he's just been driving me. . . .'

"'Oh, no!' I said. 'I've been driving you. Perhaps you imagined it was Mr. Weymouth. You had a nasty knock on the head, you know, and that produces delusions.'

"'But I've been talking to him today.'

"I smiled, and shook my head, and lied.

"'You haven't said a word since you left the house,' I remarked. 'You've had a very vivid dream—that's all.'

"'I don't understand,' she said wearily.

"'And I don't want you to try to,' I answered. 'Don't worry your head about it at all. Let's get on back and see your husband.'

"'Bob! Yes—Bob wouldn't have lost his head.'

Answers Coherently

"And that was all she said. She got into the car, and we drove back quietly. I talked on outside topics and she answered quite coherently: the thing was a success. She had got to the other side of the wall."

The celebrated doctor rose and mixed himself a whisky and soda; then he stood with his back to the fireplace, looking down at us.

"An utter, complete success," he repeated. "Little by little we broke the truth to her, and she took it normally and calmly—even to Gerald Weymouth's death. But the morning I went she asked me a question.

"'That dream, Sir John; that terrible dream, when I thought you were Gerald. You're sure I didn't say anything.'

"'Perfectly sure,' I answered calmly.

"And under her breath I heard her say, 'Thank God!'

"All that was two years ago, and at intervals I have said to myself—'Good. You did that very well. No one knows her secret, save me: you have restored her to her normal mind, and from information received they are still a devoted couple. In fact, you are distinctly worthy of a pat on the back.' And during those two years the gods have been laughing; this afternoon I heard their mirth.

"I luncheo with them both at the Ritz, and afterwards she had to go out shopping. So I sat on, talking to him.

"'Pretty satisfactory, Tremlin,' I said, full of the righteous glow of Fin champagne. I'm proud of that little experiment of ours.'

"'Are you?' he said, with a twisted sort of smile.

"'But dash it, man,' I said, aggrieved. 'Aren't you?'

"He looked at me, and his eyes were weary.

"'At any rate, she called for me when she thought the end was coming.'

"I positively stuttered at him.

"'What under the sun do you mean?'

"'Only that I was hidden under the tonneau cover at the back'."

Couldn't Fool Him on His Own Golf Ball

Mr. George S. Holmsted, Registrar in Bankruptcy for the Ontario Supreme Court, is also a keen golfer, and he is noted for the care he takes of his balls. In fact, his golf cronies say he never uses a new ball because he does not lose his old ones. One day lately, when playing a twosome, his ball could not be located. Up and down he went, peering into hollows and pushing aside tufts of grass, but no little grey-white sphere rewarded his search. Along came his opponent to help him, but still with the two searching, it was not to be found.

At last wearying of the delay, his partner took a ball out of his own pocket, dropped it under his belt so that it rolled out gently to the ground through the leg of his trousers. When it finally rested in a grassy mound he called out, "I say Holmsted, is this your ball?" expecting a sigh of relief and a speedy resumption of the game. Mr. Holmsted strode over, picked up the ball, examined it closely and declared, "No, that isn't my make of ball," pocketed it and continued the search.

Of course he ultimately found his own. No ball could get away from such a determined questor unless it were in a river.

Am I a Canadian?

By FREDERICK GRIFFIN

There is immigrant blood in the veins of every Canadian, no matter how far back.

CANADA might have celebrated her Diamond Jubilee by making us all Canadians—at least those of us who want to be Canadians.

At present none of us are—not even the native-born—since there is no such thing, ethnologically speaking, as a Canadian. The native Canadian must be satisfied with being broadly a British subject—which is like being known merely as his father's son.

Indeed, in this regard, he has less distinction than that enjoyed by the natives of many a Crown Colony, since they at least may claim a racial classification.

The other day a Canadian of the sixth generation, the father of three children of the seventh generation, told with considerable bitterness of his experience in registering the birth of each of them. On each occasion he wilfully filled in the word "Canadian" to designate their descent.

"You can't do that!" said the registry office clerk.

"Why not?"

"There's no such classification permitted."

"Well, that's my classification, and if you don't like it, fill it in as you blanked well please. I won't change it."

And he walked out.

As for those of us who came here as immigrants, we may classify ourselves as individual taste and feeling dictate, but the fact remains that at no point in a newcomer's career can he take a step which will indelibly stamp him a Canadian. We cannot become Canadians. We must be content to be, at the most, hybrids, hyphenates—until the time comes when our dust mingles with the native earth. Then, perhaps, our nationality will be beyond doubt.

Canadian Citizenship

But why wait for us to die to achieve identity with this country of our choice? Why not arrange for this identity now by establishing a definite Canadian citizenship to which we could subscribe? It would be a proud day for many of us if we could queue up and take out papers, make a declaration, take an oath, which would show that our first of all land loyalties was to Canada.

Let this be an equal citizenship—once achieved—for the alien-born, the British or Irish immigrant and the native-born. It would group them in a kinship which they do not always enjoy now. It would make them all partners in the past, the present and the future of this great country. It would remove or iron out the majority of the jealousies, most of the distinctions which cause friction, and the divisions which threaten discord now. The Bluenose of the Maritimes, long planted and proud of it; the Quebec Frenchman with two or more centuries contact with the soil behind him; the old Ontarian whose great grandfathers braved the wilderness; the new Western man with the Cockney twirk or the Scottish burr in his speech; the Italian-born section hand away up in the Arctic, the Icelandic settler in Manitoba; the Swede homesteader in Saskatchewan and the Ukrainian with a ranch in Alberta, and the descendants of old British settlers of the Pacific Coast, one for all and all for one, would meet on the level of an equal and recognized allegiance, by birth and by oath, to Canada.

Why Not Canadian Citizenship

There would be no longer those sophistries wherewith the narrow, colonially-minded Imperialist on the one hand and the equally narrow Native Sons of Canada on the other hinder our right to the expression of loyalty to Canada over all. The former would have us obliterate all emotions but a sentimental attachment to the old lands and traditions we have left behind, repress any love which might arise through contact with this new land—would keep us for ever in the spiritual bondage of an imperial yoke that has yielded for ever to the greater idea of a free, Imperial federation.

The latter would deny to everyone but themselves a Canadian consciousness, would exclude from the fulness of possession all but those born here, would set up a cleavage that would be as bitter as a civil war.

They would not recognize under their narrow definition such men as Sir John A. Macdonald, D'Arcy McGee, who died for Canada; Strathcona, Frazer, William Lyon Mackenzie,. Oliver, Greenshield, Forke, Dunning and a host of others who in greater or less degree have given their lives and their talents to the development of the country which it is the native son's to inherit—even though he have an immigrant father.

Distinct Nationality

All this would be wiped out by a distinct Canadian citizenship which would be uniform for all. At present the immigrant from Great Britain or Ireland is given the right to vote after a year's domicile; and after five year's domicile becomes automatically a Canadian national. This occurs in the dark. The average immigrant has no knowledge of any change in rank, no definite consciousness of any alteration in his status. There should be some open and formal ceremony of Canadian naturalization for every immigrant, British-born or foreign-born. In fact the alien is better off in this respect than the Britisher, for he may take out, at least, naturalization papers that make him a British subject. He at least is able to take a step which attests a desire to identify himself with Canada. He thus brings himself to the level of the British-born, but he fails, like them, to gain an equality with the native-born. He is still doomed to remain a hyphenate.

There should be no compulsion about the Canadian declaration of immigrants any more than there is in the present taking out of British naturalization. If five years were made the probational period, those who wished might, at the end of that time, take out papers. They would become citizens. Those who did not want to, need not. But they would be merely residents.

The Immigrant's Problem

That I am not alone in this immigrant viewpoint is shown by a letter appearing recently in the press in which the writer says, after suggesting that the Federal Government should pass a law that shall make us Canadians:

"I came out (to Canada) in 1872 and still love the country of my birth, but after fifty-five years think it my due and would prefer the name Canadian. Would it not be a graceful act on our Government's part to mark our year of jubilee as a nation by making us Canadians in law, as we are already by adoption? I believe that if a plebiscite were taken of the whole Dominion the vote would be practically unanimous that we became nationally Canadians.

"Thus in the Jubilee Year of Confederation we would enter upon a new era; we would be building up a more visible Canadian nation. The justifiable pride of nationality would grow side by side with our pride in our being of the motherland—the mother of nations as well as parliaments."

There is no suggestion of inferiority, so far as the immigrant is concerned, in this proposal. Rather is there an honorable desire to wipe out the cobweb barriers which prevent a complete identification with Canada, a desire for unity with our brothers whose fathers and grandfathers were immigrants themselves, a desire to make us, one and all, members of a sovereign people who declare their own citizenship.

We do not acknowledge inferiority, even though lacking Canadian recognition, to the native-born. It is written inevitably that the immigrant is necessary to the building up of this new nation. There is immigrant blood in the veins of every Canadian, no matter how far back. The only difference between the native and ourselves is that he is merely one of a line founded by an immigrant forefather. We are immigrant forefathers founding lines of our own.

Courage and Free Choice

Personally, I am proud of the term immigrant. It signifies courage, free choice and a capacity to come through. There was never an immigrant who came to these shores who was not an adventurer, in whom there was not, at least faintly, a spark of the spirit that makes for high endeavor. After all, many of us might have stayed in Ireland or England, or wherever we were born. We should not have starved. We should have made out. Some might even have found fame and fortune there as the years passed. But we came, leaving behind everything that was fixed, everything that was stable, our kin, our old home, our old associations; tearing up our roots, sundering our traditions, losing our identity, burning our boats—to start, unknown, friendless, unbacked, the stern fight for a place in the sun of this faraway land. And only those who have emigrated at maturity can say what a terrible and lonely fight the first few years here are. But, however—

The Canadian-born faces life here from the ground-level of experience and association. The immigrant starts from a hole in the ground. He is handicapped in the race as any transplanted thing is bound to be in competition with the native. He has to become acclimatized. He has to learn the new ways to live. He has to become accustomed to the differences in soil and surroundings. He has to fight for life in an unfamiliar setting. He has to take root.

Not every immigrant succeeds under these handicaps. But then neither does every native-born Canadian succeed, even though he starts at scratch. But when the immigrant does come through—be the measure of his success great or little—he has the right to pride in his achievement. He has the right to be called, in fact, a Canadian. His title to this country's inheritance should not be clouded by the obscurity of lack of acknowledgement. He has won through to a full citizenship which the country ought to acknowledge.

A Canadian or Nothing

Let me state my own position. Fifteen years ago this month I entered Canada as an immigrant. The major years of my adult life have been entirely passed here. The serious business of living has been largely undertaken here. Any philosophy which I may possess has been evolved by the conditions encountered during that time in this country.

I married a Canadian girl of the fourth generation. I am the father of a child of the fifth generation on her mother's side.

Have I become a Canadian?

I know I have. If I have not, I am nothing. If I went back to my native Ireland I would be more of an alien there now, more of a stranger, more of an outlander, than I was in Canada when I came ashore at Montreal. If I went back to Ireland it would be merely to look through the years at the fragrant scenes of a vanished youth, to visit the graves of those who have died, to wonder at the quaintness of the things I once knew that have been standing still—in spite of the revolution—while I have been changing.

But sometimes I think I never shall be able to call myself Canadian. I have nothing to show citizenship, nothing to show that I am a Canadian in spirit and in fact, no symbol, no scrap of paper, no outward and visible sign of status. There is only my private declaration that I feel that I am a Canadian, which means nothing. I have been able to take no definite step which might establish once and for all my sense of this citizenship.

I have long since adopted Canada. But Canada has not, by act or token, adopted me. My position—and it is the position of every immigrant—is almost that of the stray dog that attaches itself to the household and is thereafter allowed to stick around without any particular acknowledgement of his right to be there.

The King Our King

This could be all easily rectified if Canada permitted me a means of openly acknowledging my allegiance. Conditions have changed. Colonial days are over. Vanished is the Family Compact. Gone is the time when the bulk of the residents of this country meet on the level of a subservience to Government from across the water. We are absolutely free. We are the equal of the Englishman, the Irishman and the Scotsman who did not emigrate. The King is our King, directly, and not through the watered medium of Colonial Office interference. From every point of view we are sovereign and untrammeled, the equal of the Dutchman, the Swiss, the Belgian, the American—everyone else who has a country of his own. We should have citizenship.

The American makes a distinction between those who were and those who were not born in Canada. It is a distinction which we encourage because we do not wipe it out. The American permits the native-born Canadian to go over there and settle if he wants to, but he compels the non-native-born, even though he be half a century in Canada, to enter under the quota of the country of his birth. Recently we had the spectacle of this distinction clear-cut in the trouble over the commuting between the Border Cities and Detroit.

Canada should proclaim to the United States and to the world that she makes no distinction between those who were born and those who were not born here who are Canadians. She should insist that the American immigration laws treat all such Canadians equally, either to let them all in on equal terms or to bar them all equally. As a matter of fact, the effect of the American regulations is to drain off the native-born while leaving us immigrants behind to possess the land they have left. The Sons of Canada should pass a resolution about it.

The Making of a Canadian

But—coming back to the question of citizenship in its domestic application—one of the things the immigrant is a long time in discovering is how Canadian he has really become. Of course there are immigrants of a type who never become Canadians, who remain blatantly and offensively non-Canadian, who continue to think in terms of the old country from which they made their exit, who deride everything here in contrast to the customs and practices of which they themselves did not think enough to stay with. As a matter of fact, a Canadian certificate for the Canadian-minded immigrant would be a blessing to distinguish him from the man who does not hope and does not want to be a Canadian.

But the point is that there are few immigrants who are not to a greater or less degree changed spiritually and materially by the influence of Canadian surroundings. They may not, however, realize how much, unless there is something that gives them consciousness of the metamorphosis.

To the immigrant at first those who are here are aliens in speech, manner and behavior. In fact, annoying as it may sound, I am inclined to think that the average immigrant is inclined to feel superior to them—another thing which the citizenship idea would correct—and looks on himself as essentially an old countryman. Just when he begins to become a Canadian it is hard to say. The change is gradual, no doubt, and differs with the individual and his circumstances, but it occurs nevertheless even in those who are most outspoken in proclaiming their non-Canadianism. The trouble is that there is frequently nothing by which the individual may measure and realize the change.

"Back Home Sickness"

A trip "back home" is notoriously a cure for the old countryman's nostalgia, for his long-distance longing for things as they were, for his lack of life here. A trip home has made many an immigrant realize how Canadian he has really become. I think it always takes some such concrete act to drive it home.

I remember thinking for years that I was more of an old countryman than I was a Canadian, that is, in outlook and viewpoint. I had nothing to measure the change that had taken place in me. Then, in the Fall of 1919, I happened, on the occasion of the Prince's tour of Canada, to be thrown into intimate, daily contact for three months with a number of English newspapermen. Suddenly I realized that I was a Canadian.

They were delightful men, splendid fellows of achievement, interesting and agreeable companions. But they did not talk my language. They did not think my thoughts. They did not see with my eyes. They were visitors from an old, small settled sedate, conventional land. I was a citizen of a new, big, vital, vigorous youthful country.

They accepted what came to them from their forefathers. I—I—was helping to mold and create and build for my children's children.

I came back from that trip a Canadian in soul and spirit, and I have been a Canadian since.

One of the troubles is that such a small percentage of those living in Canada know it at first hand: its power: its vastness, its wealth, its beauty, its many-sidedness. A man may be born in Owen Sound, Three Rivers or Calgary, or an immigrant may come out and settle in Toronto, Montreal or Winnipeg, and know no more of Canada than what he sees from his home, his workshop or his street car window or what he may read in a paper that does not pretend to be Canadian. To such a man Canada is a cribbed circle of a few miles. Many an immigrant must live and die with a view of Canada that is compassed by the limits of the particular neighborhood where he happened to settle.

Halifax to Victoria

My only wish is that there were some way whereby every Canadian, native-born and immigrant, could see this country as I have been privileged to see it, because I happened to be a newspaperman, from Halifax to Victoria and Vancouver, from James Bay and the District of Patricia to the American border:

Douglas fir in the forests of British Columbia, tall and stately as cathedral spires; the sublime splendor of the Rocky Mountains and the magnificent engineering that sent railroads through them; the marvel of the sunrise about the peaks that encircle Lake Louise; great ships carrying thousands of soldiers back from the war into Halifax harbor; great freighters bulging with wheat from the prairie west trudging down the Great Lakes; the St. Lawrence in the Fall when its maples are toned with gold; the giant feat of erecting the Quebec bridge; the Canadian House of Commons debating conscription and the doing away with titles; Laurier, Borden, Pugsley and Lemieux speaking with their hearts bared by war; Quebec villages asleep on a Winter's night with the snow crunching beneath the runners of a sleigh and the bells of the horses tinkling a crisp carillon; Haileybury in ashes and a hundred square miles of forest and settlement wiped out; the northern lights on a September night above Moose Factory; the ships of the Seven Seas taking on pilots at Father Point; the silent monks at Mistassini making a road.

Mere flashes at random from the memory of the romance and richness of a country that stretches from the Atlantic to the Pacific, whose north pushes to the Arctic while its south grows grapes—but they help to explain why I feel that I am entitled to call myself, above all, a Canadian.

Took Lead in Pioneering West

A PIONEERING mind and a sense of direction has been attributed to Mrs. Lillian Thomas, of Winnipeg, who has recently been awarded the first $500 prize in a short story contest in which nearly a thousand manuscripts were submitted from all parts of Canada.

It is true that Mrs. Thomas is a pioneer. It is also true that she was born that way, for her Irish grandparents cut their first home out of the Ontario forest near Toronto, and her own parents pioneered in Manitoba in the early days of that Province. She has herself made several trails and pioneered in the realm of ideas and ideals.

It was she who organized the first Homemakers' Club in Saskatchewan, she who was one of the first women members of the board of Manitoba Agricultural College, one of the early members of the Canadian Women's Press Club, and she who had the most effective organizing brain behind the women suffrage campaign in Manitoba.

While still a young girl Miss Beynon made up her mind that she wanted a college education, as she was dissatisfied with the part that women played in rural life particularly, and in life generally, unless they were equipped to meet and, if necessary, change their environment adequately.

In order to put herself through she taught school while working her way through Wesley College, Manitoba University. On graduation she went at once on the staff of a Winnipeg paper, and under the pen name of "Lillian Laurie" very soon became widely known throughout the Prairie Provinces.

It was there that she first met her husband, A. V. Thomas, who was on the same paper and who is also a writer of ability, and their marriage, which has been singularly happy, has assisted in the further development of her powers as a writer.

Those who knew Mrs. Thomas in the days of the intensive suffrage campaign in Manitoba, in which she was associated with Nellie McClung, Dr. Mary E. Crawford and other able women, all testify to the fact that she is unexcelled as an executive because of her unusual ability to call forth the latent powers in her associates, her quiet reasonableness of mental attitude, her understanding of the limitations of both men and women, her somewhat stern sense of justice, and her possession of a humorous, kindly attitude toward life in all its vicissitudes.

In 1917 Mr. and Mrs. Thomas moved to New York, where both of them took up newspaper work. Mrs. Thomas became editor of The Lookout, the official magazine of the Seamen's Institute and the "hostess" of this interesting organization. There they spent four years.

Five years ago they returned to this country and to Winnipeg, where Mr. Thomas resumed his journalistic work and Mrs. Thomas undertook to conduct classes in the technique of the short story, an undertaking in which she has met with a considerable amount of encouraging experience.

"All men," said the lady who had kept a boarding-house—"all men, dearie, is brutes."

Her friend nodded her grey head wisely. She had been married twice.

"Yes," she agreed. "No one knows that better than me, an' though me second ain't no saint, I'll say this for 'im—he's better'n me first. He's in gaol so much that I 'ave practically all I earn for me own use."

BREAD

By FANNIE HURST, Author of "Lummox," "Humoresque". The World's Highest Paid Short Story Writer

Old man Kinney had fought through the valiant years. He fought through life making bread for the hungry mouths of humanity. There was joy in the making of bread—a certain rhythm to it. It was work, long, hard, draining work. But Raymond Kinney loved the making of bread—loved it more than he feared the work. It filled his hands and his heart. He had a sense of devoting his days to life giving.

THE old man was happy. People, however, couldn't know that. They said he had met reverses and shook their heads and spoke long on the wisdom of putting aside that penny for the rainy day, and rearing one's children with a careful eye against over-indulgence.

In a measure this old man, Raymond Kinney, had put aside that penny. A right pretty one, too, but the inroads of heavy family expense, the long illness of a good wife, with major operations at expensive intervals, and, last, the inroads of his two sons upon the reserve fund that was to have gone toward a comfortable old age, had washed away the reserve.

People said of old man Kinney that he had two black sheep in his family of two sons. That perhaps was partially true. Edmond, from the first of his adult years, had gone his rather wild and unrestrained way, and Junior, while not wilful, had what is known as a propensity for jumping the wrong way. Junior could always manage to ally himself with the losing side of a business endeavor, a political bet or a matrimonial choice. He could almost be counted on to jump the wrong way when required to make a decision.

Raymond and Asa

Old Man Kinney had fought through valiant years to bring these two boys of his to maturity. He had not always been president of the Acme Baking Company. When his two boys were respectively aged four and six, Raymond Kinney and his wife, Asa, had constituted the entire personnel of their little bake shop in an outskirt town of New York called Burlingame. On a capital of two hundred dollars, Raymond and Asa had started business the year after their marriage, and for twelve years thereafter it was Raymond himself who did the baking in a furiously hot basement kitchen underneath the shop and Asa who sold the finely risen bread, red-hot buns and sugared and cinnamoned coffee cake across the counter.

In Summer and Winter alike, when Raymond came up out of his kitchen at the end of a long day before the relentless mouth of his oven, it could be literally said of him that every stitch on his body was drenched with the perspiration of his toil. The same could almost be said of Asa, when she closed shop. Ten, fifteen hours on their feet were the daily occurrence for these two. The children romped and grew up around the warm, spicy atmosphere of the bake shop. Its life-giving scent lay along their nostrils from the time they could crawl. The odor of the bread, yeasty, and pleasantly sour, the sweet, racy smell of the cookies and buns, penetrated back into the two rooms the family occupied at the rear of the shop.

Raymond's flour-white clothing, the clean baker's dust, powdered the little rooms when he came in staggering tired after a day before the furnaces. The whole house smelled of bread. The whole of the little block in fact carried the aroma. In Winter especially, when the shop door opened and closed, the warm, fragrant smell rushed out into the air and caused the noses of the passerby to quiver.

Hard, Long Work

It was hard work, it was long work, it was arduous work, it was draining, straining work, and yet during those years Raymond came to love the making of the bread. It was almost like giving life to see the dough inflate slowly, lop over the pan edges, swell, grow, take on a certain vitality. And then the process of baking. Watching the contents of the great pans rise, the loaves take shape, the tops brown and harden.

Life-giving loaves to be set in rows on the cooling board and then passed out to the eager hands and hungry mouths of the humanity that thrived on it.

There was joy and a certain rhythm in the making of the breads. And yet, of course, when the time came that the Kinneys had prospered sufficiently to enlarge the shop and take on help, it was a duty, not only to Asa, who was entitled to the rest, but to the children, who needed larger horizons for education, to move out of the back rooms and conduct the bakery on a larger scale.

Five years later, Kinney had a plant of forty men and six delivery wagons and the little shop had become the Acme Baking Co., Incorporated, and one of his sons was in the first year at the State University and the second in the first year of a commercial course.

Asa, poor dear, those first years that she might have enjoyed her well-earned leisure, sickened and died. It was a blow to Kinney. It made him feel his success a mockery. But of course there were the boys. And since nothing succeeds like success, by the time Edmond had graduated from the State University and Junior had already started his career as an automobile salesman, Kinney had amassed from his baking business a considerable fortune. That is, it could be said that Raymond Kinney was worth forty or fifty thousand dollars.

The two boys and their father lived in a small family hotel by now, shared a comfortable suite and owned a small five-passenger car. The old baker was generous with his boys, although quite irascible at their shortcomings, and in the beginning had been anxious that they follow his footsteps in the business.

That, however, was not to be. Edmond from the first was bent on Wall Street and Junior gravitated toward different commercial interests than the business the old man had built up.

In a way it was a blow, but when an opportunity came to sell the Acme, Raymond, realizing that as the organization grew, younger and stronger hands were needed, sold out one fine day and retired with a small fortune of forty or fifty thousand.

Beginning of the End

The boys approved this. For a time life went on smoothly enough with the three men sharing their hotel suite, until one day Junior eloped with a girl who had long been causing his father some concern, and the very next week Edmonds got caught in the street on a margin buy, which had also been causing his father much loud objection, and no little concern. To cover him, Raymond had to come forward with about ten thousand dollars.

Those were the beginnings. Junior's marriage proved to be the luckless affair Raymond had feared. It cost the old man about five thousand dollars to pry his son free of it. And his difficulties had apparently only just started with Edmond.

For a pair of wild, reckless boys these two seemed hard to beat. At the end of another five years Raymond, then creeping up near his sixties, was practically, indeed actually, down to the bed rock of his nest egg.

The old man was stripped. Thanks to his boys, a second and equally unfortunate marriage of Junior's, Edmond's gambling mania and other expensive habits that had cost the old man many a bitter scene of anger and threatening, Raymond Kinney at fifty-nine was about broke.

It was then that these two boys did jointly one of the few constructive deeds in their lives. They banded together, they scrimped, worked and schemed until at the end of a year, when resources were lower and lower, they were able to present their father with a check for one thousand dollars to buy his way into a comfortable home for aged men, which they had in mind in Syracuse, New York.

Back to the Bakery

That, of course, meant that the boys would be free of the responsibility of personally caring for the old man in his declining years, but nevertheless they were able, on the other hand, to insure his declining years a certain amount of comfort and well being in a home known for its atmosphere of quiet family life and seclusion. The old man took his cheque. Three weeks later, unbeknown to them, he had set up a bake-shop in a quiet outskirt nite of a town. A one-room affair, with a basement kitchen and an alcove off it for bedroom. He had no helper.

The old man rose at four in the morning and baked until nine, kept open shop until one. Snatched a wink of sleep over his lunch, baked a few batches of afternoon buns and then opened shop again from four until midnight.

But he made out. Sparsely, it is true, and forcing ends to meet with no little difficulty.

But it was blessed to be back at the baking of the bread. It filled his hands and heart. The warm, yeasty smell was life-giving. It gave him the sense of devoting these declining days of his to life-giving.

The old man was happy.

Libel Suit in Paris Recalls Pathetic Story of "The Lost Dauphin"

ONCE more across the scene in France there moves the tragic figure of the "Lost Dauphin," the pathetic uncrowned Louis XVII, who died a prisoner in the Temple and around whose personality a score of legends have been woven. Still the tale persists that the unfortunate Prince escaped; still recollections are brought forth of the dozens of pretenders who have claimed that they were the authentic heir to the Bourbon throne of France. Only the other day in a Paris court there was enacted an echo of the famous Naundorff case when Louis Charles Jean Philippe de Bourbon, calling himself the rightful King of France, brought an unsuccessful action for libel on account of statements published about Naundorff, his grandfather.

Was the ten-year-old Dauphin rescued from his prison tower by royalists and taken to England? Did he make his way to America and end a long life there, as some have asserted? Eminent historians have busied themselves for years producing proofs of the Prince's death and dismissing the reports that he was seen in other countries long after the date of his burial.

No less than twenty-five "lost Dauphins"—the foremost of them Naundorff—have appeared before French courts to press their claims. Hergevault, Fruchard, Marassin, Mathurin Bruneau, Dufresne, Persat, Auguste Meves, Fontolive, Richemont—these are only a few of the "missing Princes" who each in his day collected enthusiastic partisans and disturbed the Government of France.

Louis XVII

The little Louis XVII who saw his royal father and Marie Antoinette, his mother, go from the Temple to the guillotine had not been dead five years before there were signs that the tale that he was still alive was finding its sympathetic audience. In a work by a certain Regnault-Warin it was detailed how the Dauphin was smuggled from the Temple tower in a wooden hobby-horse and a dumb and sickly child left in his place. This was the child, it was asserted, that died in the prison. The Dauphin himself, according to the romance, was hailed as King at Fonteno and later put aboard a ship for America. The ship was seized by a Republican frigate and the Dauphin died between its decks.

The Regnault-Warin volume inspired many claimants to the throne. Startlingly alike are the tales narrated by the various "Dauphins" as they were brought before the court. Hergevault, the son of a tailor, sprang into instant fame as the first claimant, gathering a small court about him and declaring that the elder Hergevault had provided the substitute in the tower, while he himself was the real Prince. Hailed for a time in Spain as the authentic Dauphin, Hergevault was arrested on his return to France and sent to prison for four years. But no sooner was he free than he collected once more his circle of followers and resumed his pose. For a second time he faced the court, which sent him to Bicetre, where he died, still proclaiming that he was the Dauphin.

A drummer boy tried it next. He confessed eventually that he was the son of a clockmaker. A third contestant pointed to the mark of a fleur-de-lis and crown and the Bourbon initials on his thigh as proof that he was the prisoner of the Temple. Both found adherents who were loyal to them.

Cling to Romantic Figure

The popular mind refuses to believe that romantic figures pass away. So firmly had the tale of the substitute child gripped the public that it became the foundation of every "missing Dauphin" claim that appeared. Mathurin Bruneau, the son of a shoemaker, returned to France from America to press his claim to the throne. He went further than his fellow-claimants, issuing a series of proclamations in the name of the King of France which promptly landed him behind prison bars.

Up to the time of the fall of the Bourbons the "missing Dauphins" had uniformly been persons from the lower ranks of society; but now a totally different type of claimant—an individual of natural gifts with the ability to convince influential circles—was about to appear. In this classification are listed Naundorff and Richemont, the two men who gave the Government of France the most to think about in connection with their representations.

It was in 1831 that Richemont made his bow with the publication of the "Memoirs of the Duke of Normandie, Son of Louis XVI." The work was an imposing, seemingly well authenticated claim, backed by many documents and statements from important persons.

Fate of Richemont

Unfortunately for Richemont, however, he seems to have been possessed of a natural liking for intrigue of all varieties. Following up his memoirs with a volley of pamphlets and mixing enthusiastically in a host of political intrigues, he rapidly became such a thorn in the side of the Government that the police made a descent on his lodgings, where they unearthed papers of a treasonable character. One more "Dauphin" went on trial, this time charged with conspiracy against the life of the King and the safety of the State.

He created a sensation by declaring that he had disclosed his identity as the Dauphin to Louis XVIII, but had refused to press his claim to the throne at the time, fearing that it would precipitate a civil war. He told a tale of being rescued from the Temple in a basket of laundry and of travel in Italy, America and Brazil.

Twelve years' imprisonment was the penalty he received, but he escaped and returned to the publication of further "Memoirs of the Dauphin." With the Revo- of 1848 the public interest in missing princes had waned a good deal, and Richemont found himself unable to impress the public with his declarations. He died in 1853.

Remarkable Tale

Naundorff's tale was the most remarkable of all. He arrived in Paris in 1833, even dispatching an emissary to Richemont's trial to protest "in the name of Naundorff" against the claimant. His first act on opening his campaign was to send a letter to the Duchesse d'Angouleme, calling upon her to appear in court to accord him recognition as her brother, the missing Prince. The result was an immediate opportunity for Naundorff to recount his story on the stand.

Here, there and everywhere sprang up the "Naundorffistes" to rally at his call. With a full two hundred documents in support of his representations, Naundorff was marshaling by far the most important mass of evidence yet adduced by a claimant to the throne. The Court heard the evidence and banished him from France.

After a further effort to continue his campaign from England, Naundorff turned his interest to inventions, and while on a visit to Holland in connection with a "discovery" was permitted by the Dutch Government to reside in Delft. Stricken by a sudden illness, he died just after his wife and daughter had been summoned from England. To "Naundorff, the inventor," who had brought Napoleon, Josephine and a legion of other historic figures into his testimony and who had told of imprisonments, persecution, rescues and wild adventure as the lost Prince, the Dutch Government accorded a great funeral. Soldiers bore the bier and public men followed it to the grave.

Fake Burial

The most picturesque and important claimant had passed. It was Naundorff who asserted that as the Dauphin he had been carried to the top of the tower and hidden there by friends while another child was put in his place. When this substitute died, his tale ran, the body was removed from the coffin and, drugged with opium, he was smuggled into it. On the way to the cemetery in a carriage he was removed and the empty coffin was buried.

Among the theories advanced and given wide credit in connection with the death of the Dauphin is the one that states that the unfortunate Prince was murdered in the Temple in January, 1794, and that a feeble child was substituted in his cell. When this child in the course of time succumbed, it was given out that the Dauphin had died a natural death and the substitute was interred as Louis XVII. Not even the tale of L'Aiglon, France's other pathetic Prince, can compare with that of the Dauphin in its hold on the imagination. Many throne pretenders have sprung up in history, but never in such numbers as those who have aspired to be hailed as Louis XVII.

Rancher Prefers Rodeo to Golf

NOT all captains of industry find their recreation on the golf links. Alberta's ranching country has a millionaire sheep and cattle man who finds the royal and ancient game altogether too tame.

He is Ray Knight, of Raymond, champion calf roper of Canada, crowned such at the Calgary Stampede last year. This man, who has upwards of 30,000 sheep on a thousand Southern Alberta hills, not to mention large herds of range cattle, also has tremendous mining interests in the Rocky Mountain States.

A few years ago Knight staged a rodeo at Saskatoon. It was there that he was introduced to the Prince of Wales, whose High River ranch is not far from Knight's. The royal rancher and the knight of the lariat were friends right away, a friendship that has continued. Knight was also a close friend of the late Charles M. Russell, the cowboy artist. It was Russell who painted the roping champion seated in the saddle astride his famous cow pony, Bluebird. The picture is one of the big rancher's cherished possessions.

Although his business responsibilities are many the rancher never allows them to interfere with his fun. And his greatest fun is found at round-up time when rodeos are staged daily. Then there are the annual stampedes which never fail to lure the champion. He loves the glamor, the thrill, the risk, the romance of it all. He is one of the most famous rodeo managers in America and owns a string of bucking horses known to riders from Edmonton to the Rio Grande.

A Trader and a Gentleman

THE big brown rat is perhaps the most despised of animals; even a tender-hearted nature lover could think of nothing to say in his favor. A relative of his, the wood rat, is one of the most interesting little people in fur. Honest, too, is Mr. Woodrat. He will take what he wants when he finds it; but he never fails to leave something in its place. That is why he is often called trade or pack rat.

The wood rat is found all over the West and in some parts of the East and South. He is about two-thirds the size of the brown rat, and of the same general shape; but otherwise he is totally unlike them. His coat, a greyish brown on his back and white underneath, is soft and thick; his tail, unlike the usual rat tail, is covered with hair. His feet are white. He has round ears and big black eyes in which there is none of the ugly look one sees in the eyes of the brown rat.

When he is living in a rocky country, he may live among the rocks, but very often he collects a huge pile of sticks and brambles on the surface of the ground, in the middle of which he builds his nest. If he lives on the desert he finds the queer cactus plants ideal for his purpose. When a cabin is deserted, he is likely to move right in, carrying great piles of sticks and trash.

It is not always things to eat that the trader appropriates. He is a great collector. He takes anything he can lift and drag. He seems to delight particularly in bright shiny things. Knives, spoons, buttons, thimbles, tinfoil, even money and watches have been found in his nest. A trade rat who never has had access to camps and cabins of men has missed much of the joy of life.

In the Big Basin of California, among the giant redwoods, the little traders are so numerous, and so persistent in carrying on their vocation, or perhaps it is their avocation, that campers sometimes fail to see the humor of it. When one gets up in the morning to find stones in the place of potatoes, and a pile of sticks where only bread should be, he does not fully appreciate Mr. Trader's honest endeavors to pay in full.

The wood rats are, for the most part, night workers. But sometimes an independent old fellow, in defiance of the Rat Trader's Union, decides to put in a little overtime. He lingers until after daylight, and the cook, coming on the scene, catches him in the act of walking off with some of her provisions.

He should worry! He knows that a woman rarely hits what she throws at. He departs sedately, stopping now and then to stand up on his hind legs and look back with an injured air. He was not stealing. He was only trading. Why should the cook be so angry?

Wood rats are extremely fond of soap. What candy is to a child, or a tallow candle to an Eskimo, soap is to a wood rat. He will climb trees for it, or gnaw through boxes and bags to reach it. A tin container is about the only thing that will keep soap safe from his depredations.

Some girl campers in the big basin tell of one wood rat whom they suspect of getting too much soap.

One morning they arose to find an old fellow dying on the ground, motionless, his tiny hands folded across his stomach. He had the pitiful expression of an ailing puppy, and an indifference to his fate comparable only to the indifference of a human being in the throes of seasickness.

The camp nurse, a very humane lady, conceived the idea of giving him the proper antidote. 'Propping the sufferer's mouth open with a small stick, she had little difficulty in pouring a generous dose down his throat. Then she turned a box over him, and cautioning the girls not to disturb him, went about the tasks of the day. That evening when she lifted the box, the invalid had sufficiently recovered to return to the bosom of his family.

Yes, the trade rat is an interesting little fellow, just trying to get along, doing his duty as he sees it.—Genevieve Whipple Wright in "Our Dumb Animals."

A Postman's Pennies

In the big cloth manufacturing town of Leeds, in Yorkshire, many people suffer from consumption, or tuberculosis, as it is oftener called in these days.

An Association existed twenty-four years ago whose aim it was to help the sufferers from this lingering sickness. One of those who joined it was Albert Boyle, a postman. Now, many a one who was so busy and earned so small a salary as Mr. Boyle, would have thought, "I have nothing to give." But this postman had a homeless friend whom he wanted taken care of. He made a little box with a slit just big enough to take in a penny. He began to gather pennies from shopkeepers and market men. When the box was quite filled, it was brought to the Secretary of the Association. The sum was entered in a book. The last entry brought the sum up to £1,676 2s. 1d., or more than $8,000. Perhaps some of our little friends will tell us how many pennies were gathered together. The Children's Newspaper, which sends on the story, says that Mr. Boyle has contributed to other charities as well. Who can measure how much good the pennies have done in this poor man's lifetime? He is still collecting, and we hope will live long to show that a willing heart will find a way to help the suffering.

THREE BLIND MICE

A Jolly Room

Last week the newspapers printed some good news. The Children's Room in the Public Library was to be made fresh and bright. Every speck of dust that had hidden away was to be driven out, and dim colors washed over. We have not yet seen how the room looks, but we hope it is very pretty. To tell the truth, when your editor peeps in sometimes, the little boys and girls look so nice that the walls are forgotten. There are always flowers to see, and many books have outsides as beautiful (or nearly) as the poems and stories inside. We would, however, like to see more pictures. Perhaps there will be more when we go in one of these days.

The children have gone to the library this Summer oftener than usual, though many have taken an armful of books to camp with them. We hope every one of these will come back without a spot, much less a tear. To tell you a secret: You take better care of your books than some of the grown folks who go to the downstairs library do.

Yet, however careful you are, books will wear out. We hope our good City Fathers will remember you all and that very soon many new volumes with lovely pictures will take the place of the dear old shabby ones that have delighted the children who have grown up now. Perhaps some little reader's father or mother can find a volume good enough for Miss King to put on the library shelves.

Yes, the Children's Room is a jolly room. Its quietness does not keep the spirit of kindness from filling every corner of the place and lighting up each face there. Our boys and girls are fortunate to have such a dear room to come to.

A Very Happy Place

If there are many merrier, happier places in the world these Summer days than the Central Park, we would like to hear about them. Hundreds of little children are there, and each one is enjoying himself or herself to their heart's content.

Every swing is full and going. All the slides are filled with eager moving little people. Babies roll on the grass or watch the others from their carriages, while their mothers sew or chat.

But the best place of all is the wading pool. What clear, cool, rippling water waits for the small bare feet. A few of the older children wear bathing suits and lie down while the water covers them. Now and again a little bird hops on the ledge and takes a sip of the cool water. Someday, perhaps he will venture to take a bath, too.

One laddie says he and his baby brother come to the pool when his mother is too busy to take them to the beach. Another mother is shelling peas ready for dinner, while her little girl paddles about.

There is a supervisor of this playground, but the visitor is not likely to distinguish her from the other kind-faced ladies smiling at the little ones. No doubt, she has learned that happy children are good, and that it is not wise to interfere unless something goes really wrong.

If some grown-up has a fit of the blues, an hour in the park is likely to help, if not cure, that hideous sickness.

For all the happiness the swimming pool has brought and will bring, the good Kiwanians of Victoria are entitled to the blessing of mothers and a share in the joys of the little children.

The Cat and the Saucer

A cat had found a beautiful nursery for her five kittens behind some syringa bushes at the bottom of a London garden. When the owners of the garden discovered the place they took a white saucer and poured out some milk, which the mother cat gratefully lapped up. Then the saucer was refilled and left near by. When further supplies were brought the empty saucer was found covered with leaves. The leaves were brushed away and the saucer was refilled. The next time it was found covered with leaves again.

There seems little doubt that pussy thought the white saucer too conspicuous an object on the dark soil, and feared that it might guide undesirable visitors to her nursery.

Save the School Gardens

In some of the schools of Victoria, children have been busy all Spring and Summer digging, planting and cultivating. The crops will be ready for gathering when school opens after the holidays. The season was late, and the children had not gathered the fruits of their labor before the holidays began.

Incredible as it may seem, there were people last year who dug the potatoes, pulled up the cabbages and other vegetables. Is it too much to ask that such wanton waste be prevented this season. Neighbors, one would think, could do much to guard the children's little domain.

No movement is more worthy of encouragement than that which makes the schools and grounds beautiful and attractive. The buildings themselves are usually bare enough, and playgrounds must of necessity be left unencumbered. But borders and garden plots, roses, and other vines are a valuable part of city property, and are well worth the efforts of all to preserve. Let everyone, little and big, try to Save the School Gardens.

Tiny British Possession

Ascension is an isolated island in the South Atlantic Ocean, 760 miles from St. Helena and 900 miles from Cape Palmas on the African coast. It is of volcanic origin, and the peak of its mountain ridge rises to a height of 2,820 feet. The island is said to have been discovered by a Portuguese named Gallego on Ascension Day, 1501. The extreme length of the island is seven and one-half miles, and its extreme breadth is six miles, and it has an area of about thirty-eight square miles. Being situated in the heart of the region visited by the southeast trade winds, its climate is dry and salubrious up to an altitude of 1,800 feet, but above that height the air is damp and fogs prevail.

The island remained uninhabited until 1815, when the British took possession of it, and administered it by the Board of Admiralty until 1922, when it was transferred to the Colonial Office. Georgetown, on the northwest coast, is the capital.

Home of the Brontes Now Becomes a Museum

HAWORTH PARSONAGE

FEW more interesting biographies have been written than that of Charlotte Bronte by Mrs. Gaskell. Now that teachers and others are visiting Great Britain we are likely to hear more of the museum that has taken the place of the home of the famous family. We take the description, a very sad but interesting one, from The Children's Newspaper.

Jane Eyre's home will never be a home any more.

What good news it is! Sir James Roberts has offered to buy Haworth Parsonage from the Church Lands Trustees for £3,000 and to make it into a Bronte Museum.

We are not glad for the sake of the famous writers who lived there; their books are their monuments. We are not glad for the sake of the house itself, for it is neither beautiful nor very old. But we are glad for the sake of the people who might have lived there if the parsonage had not become a museum. Surely no house was ever less fit to be a home. Even in the slums there are clean, cheerful, glowing homes to be found, homes made out of poor rooms by brave East End mothers. But no one could drive the shadows out of Haworth, or live there without thinking of the unhappy Bronte children.

Children's Cheerless Study

Jane Eyre was, of course, Charlotte Bronte. When her father became the parson of Haworth, then a lonely Yorkshire hamlet, she was only four, and her eldest sister was not yet seven. There were six children. Almost at once their mother fell ill, and the little seven-year-old Maria became mother to the rest, keeping them quiet in a tiny, fireless, toyless room called the children's study, and taking them for walks over the grey moors. Soon the mother died, and one by one the children followed her. The first to go was Maria, but she lived long enough to go to school and be ill-used there, for she is the Helen Burns of "Jane Eyre."

The parsonage was described by Charlotte's friend, Mrs. Gaskell, as an oblong eight-roomed house of stone with flagged floors, striking chill and a dreary outlook upon crowded gravestones. She says Haworth was built without any regard for sanitation, and that the wells must have been poisoned. From the mason's shop near the parsonage there came constantly the sound of someone chipping away at a fresh gravestone.

In such a home Charlotte and Emily Bronte grew up and wrote their famous poems and novels. It was made even more dreary than it might have been by their father's habit of taking his meals alone in his study.

Fame came to Charlotte at last, and love; but she would not leave her father, and only one year after her marriage she died in the parsonage and followed the other children to the grave.

Doubtless the prasonage has been improved since her days, but still we cannot think of it as a fit place to be a home. We are glad to know that no other children will live in that grim house with a churchyard on two sides of it, and its memories of six tiny children whispering in a room without a fireplace so as not to disturb a dying mother.

Where "Jane Eyre" Was Written

The Bronte Society will house its valuable collection in the parsonage, and the 10,000 people who visit Haworth for the sake of Charlotte and Emily every year will be able to see the rooms where "Jane Eyre" was written, where the sisters walked up and down discussing their work in the dark to save candles, and where they made bread and swept floors to save the old servant Tabby.

With Sir James Roberts' offer of Haworth Parsonage the Society has received another valuable gift. Mr. H. Bonnell, of Philadelphia, has died and bequeathed to the Society his collection of Bronte manuscripts. More than ever book-lovers will flock to Haworth.

The Knocker-Up—A Tale of Old Factory Days

RAT, tat, tat! The young doctor started up in bed; it was his first night in the old-fashioned silk-weaving town, and he was not used to the noises of the place. The measured knocking continued in the distance, coming closer, growing louder, tapping every bedroom window-pane, skipping over the doctor's stucco house, beginning again on the next building, and dying down the winding, cobbled street.

An hour later at breakfast his maid came in, saying: "Will you see Samuel Proudlove, the knocker-up?"

In came Samuel, a little, old, sandy-haired man, with mild blue eyes and bent legs "which would not have stopped a pig in an alley," as the saying is in Cheshire. In his hand he carried his knocking-up pole, eight feet long, with a bunch of wires at its head. "Doctor, I want you to come and see my sister Hephzibah; a sad sufferer she is; been quite bedridden a matter of seven years."

"Who are these people?" asked the doctor of the maid when the old man had gone.

"They are brother and sister living together," she replied. "They have a little money of their own, and Samuel earns a little more by knocking up all the mill hands. A kind little fellow, though a bit simple, and as clever in the house as a woman. He had need to be, for his sister Hephzibah is a Tartar and leads him a terrible life. She has got all her wits about her though she may be in bed. She took to her bed when her mother died, and there she has lain ever since with the blinds drawn. But she keeps an eye on everything that goes on in the house, and makes her brother polish up the cottage till it shines."

An hour later the doctor was tapping with the brass knocker of the Proudloves' quaint little black and white cottage.

"Come in!" said a shrill voice.

He entered, passing through the kitchen to the bedroom on the other side. Polished oak and shining brasses, Staffordshire Tobies on the high mantelpiece, a slender grandmother clock ticking in a corner; on the window-sill a pot or two of flowers yearning for the sun shut out by the drawn blinds. In the middle of the room a four-post bed, very smart with snowy linen and a bright patchwork quilt. In the bed an old lady in a scarlet bed-jacket and frilly night cap covering a fuzz of white hair; hooked nose, black browed with cheeks as waxen as the flowers on the sill—Miss Hephzibah Proudlove.

"Sit ye down, young man," she said. "Now that old doctor has retired I must have the new one whether I like it or not. Seven years I have been in bed, come Ladyday, and though old doctor did understand my constitution best I would like you to have a look at my legs."

After a prolonged and careful examination the doctor stood up to give his verdict.

"Miss Proudlove, what I have to say is this: There is nothing at all the matter with you except that your muscles are a bit wasted with lying in bed. You are perfectly able, bit by bit, to get about and do your share of the world's work like other people. Go out into the sun and let daylight into the house."

Miss Hephzibah, choking with indignation, got her breath just as he was crossing the threshold.

"Never darken my doors again, not even though you are the only doctor in Mossley!"

The year went on and the doctor came once more to the cottage, whether Hephzibah willed it or not; with him, two stretcher-bearers, and on the stretcher old Samuel reposing with two badly sprained ankles. He had slipped on a slide. After he had been put to bed in the kitchen the doctor went in to see Hephzibah.

"Miss Proudlove, I will send the district nurse, and I had better get a girl to look after the pair of you, for your brother will be in bed for some time."

"A nurse is welcome whenever she comes," said Hephzibah, "but a girl working in my clean kitchen, never. Eating good victuals and wanting a mint of money."

"Well, I will send you Mrs. Mabsom; she is elderly and experienced enough," said the doctor.

Mrs. Mabsom was less welcome than a girl would have been. The battle raged while Samuel covered his ears.

"I'll have no untidy worker dirtying my clean cottage," cried Hephzibah.

"Well, there has got to be sombody to look after the pair of you, you old witch!" returned Mrs. Mabsom.

"Call me a witch, do you?" said Hephzibah, her black eyes twinkling with malice. "I can conjure up a boggart to do the work for me. Good-day to you!"

The door slammed and a blessed silence fell. The old man groaned. If his fierce sister was going to turn everyone from the house, how were they going to manage?

"Samuel love," said she in very changed tones, "don't you be afraid now; the boggart shall put everything straight for you."

Presently there was a sound of shuffling hopping steps in the kitchen. Samuel unclosed his eyes and took a quick look and went under the bedclothes again. It was true. There really was a goblin bent and crooked, with an immense flapping head. In a light-headed daze the simple old man heard it moving about, putting pans on the fire, shaking up his pillows, easing the bandages on his feet. A friendly sprite it seemed. Though he dared not look at it, his fears fled and he slept.

In the middle of the night he awoke with a terrible start to remember his forgotten duty. He called to his sister.

"Hephzibah, what am I to do? It will soon be morning, and there is no one to knock up the mill hands."

"Shut your eyes, Sam, and don't worry," said Hephzibah in the protecting tones of old days when she was the big sister and he little brother. "I will speak to the boggart about that."

When nurse came next morning she was astounded to find a clean hearth, a bright fire, and a comfortable breakfast laid by her patient. It became a source of interest to the neighbors. Whoever could be doing the Proudlove's work? For the cottage was kept in the same beautiful order as when old Samuel was up and doing.

The old man grew uneasy when pay day came round. Hephzibah had always let him keep it for his own pin money. "If the boggart has been doing all the work," he moaned, "the mill hands will never think of paying me."

But on Saturday the welcome figure of the foreman appeared at his bedside. "Here is your money, Samuel, and don't you be worrying to get back to work. The hands have all been knocked up true and faithful to the tick in the morning."

Gratitude beamed in Samuel's face. "It is a boggart that has been doing the knocking up for me," said he. "Comes into the house by night, sweeps the floor and makes my broth for me, though I dursn't look at it, not even if it were ever so. Did you ever spy it out of the window yourself, George?"

"I took a peep at it this morning when it knocked on the pane," said the foreman. "A very uncommon kind of a boggart it was, Samuel; bent double, with a scarlet bed-jacket on and a frilly cap."

In the mirror he caught a glimpse of Miss Hephzibah, shaking her fist at him, her face distorted with fury—a vision no man might disregard.

The boggart continued to look after Samuel during his illness and to knock up the mill hands for him. Luck seemed to have turned for him, too, for not only were his legs stronger for the long rest, but his sister Hephzibah got better in a most surprising way and did her share of the work. Though she regained her activity, because of the long years in bed, she was destined to walk "tew-double" ever after.—My Magazine.

Helping the Gardener

Watch the bees, the humming birds, and other winged things as they flit from flower to flower these Midsummer days. Each is busy on its own errands, but as it gathers the sweet nectar from the heart of the flower, or carries off the tiny insects that hide there, it covers itself with pollen and brings it to the next flower. Some of it falls on the pistil and enables the plant to produce seed.

The farmer, it is said, depends on the bumble bee for his next year's crop of clover, and you will often see beehives near the finest orchards. This is not altogether for the honey they make, valuable as this is. From tree to tree they carry the pollen that gathers on their bodies, leaving some on blossoms that have none of the yellow dust. Then we have big crops of sweet fruit in later months. In these days when flower seed growing is becoming one of the industries of Vancouver Island, young people should try to learn something about the helpers of the gardener.

There is a school in every garden and field where patient watchers may find not only knowledge but great delight.

Interviewer Tells Wonderful Story of Successes Earned by Hard Work of National Broadcast President

SEEMING MIRACLES WROUGHT DAILY

New Captain of New Industry Grew Up in Atmosphere of Faith So Important in Every Success

"The most important man in radio entertainment at the moment is Merlin H. Aylesworth," writes Bruce Barton in the American Magazine for August, in an article entitled, "There Will Always Be Something New To Do."

Discussing radio development within the last five years, Mr. Barton says:

"From a dusty room in a factory to the grand ballroom of the Waldorf; from crude volunteer programmes to programmes that this year will cost more than two million dollars for talent alone; from broadcasting stations of limited radius to the National Broadcasting Company which, on February 22, linked up forty-three stations and caused the voice of the President of the United States to be heard by more millions than had ever before heard a single human voice—this is the story of radio."

Throughout the article, Mr. Barton includes personal experiences in connection with radio. He tells of being present in a factory building in Newark, N.J., one Sunday afternoon five years ago when Ed. Wynn and members of his company broadcast their comic performance of "The Perfect Fool." He recalls the look of mingled awe and incredulity on the faces of the actors—"it seemed so unbelievable that anybody could possibly be hearing them."

FROM FACTORY TO BALLROOM

And then he tells of being present in the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel grand ballroom on November 15, 1926, at the inaugural programme of the National Broadcasting Company.

Mr. Barton goes on to describe the artists broadcasting from the Waldorf ballroom, New York:

"Following Harold Bauer's performance was a second's pause, and then suddenly, as clear and strong as though the voice were there beside us, the announcer—'Ladies and gentlemen: We are now in the Drake Hotel, Chicago, in the parlor of Miss Mary Garden. Miss Garden will sing.' And Miss Garden did.

"Another second's pause, and again a different announcer — 'Ladies and gentlemen: We are now in Independence, Kansas, in the dressing room of Will Rogers. Mr. Rogers will speak.'

"And out of the air about us came the unmistakable tones of Will.

"I was sitting in Mr. Young's box, and while Will Rogers was still speaking, a messenger entered and passed us a photograph. A photograph of Mary Garden before the microphone in her parlor at the Drake Hotel; a photograph taken less than half an hour before and sent us over the wire. I passed it back without comment. What comment could one make that would not be inane?"

THE MAN AYLESWORTH

Of Mr. Aylesworth, Mr. Barton continues: "It occurs to me, as I draw toward a close, that I have not told much about this friend of mine, this new captain of a new industry, as a man. I have mentioned his age, forty years; but as to what he looks like, how he lives, and what qualities he has that have made him what he is, I have not said a word. Let me hasten then to say he has tremendous energy . . . but his initiative and his terrific persistence are equally impressive. I said earlier in this piece that if I had been one of those debtors in Colorado who owed bad bills to the doctors, I should have preferred to have almost anyone else on my trail. I speak feelingly. I have had him on my trail. The power to form friendship, which is nothing more nor less than the habit of showing one's self friendly, is one of the great powers that lift men up. 'Deac' Aylesworth has it . . . I spoke at the beginning of the asset which a preacher's son has in growing up in an atmosphere of faith. Faith is one of the big elements in every success; it has been a big factor in 'Deac' Aylesworth's."

AUTHOR SEEKS TO RESTRAIN RADIO

Dissatisfied With Broadcast of Opera, Composer Applies for Court Injunction

PARIS, July 30.—Believing that the broadcast of his opera has in some measure proved detrimental to its stage performance, M. Andre Messager, Paris composer of comic operas, has gone to London to bring suit against the British Broadcasting Company, Limited, claiming an injunction to restrain the defendants from infringing his copyright in the music of "The Little Michus."

M. Messager's attorney said there had been a performance of the opera from the British Broadcast Corporation's studio last November 10. He claimed the opera was a stage play and that it was extremely damaging to it to be broadcast. He asserted that the conditions of the performance were such that one could not get a proper estimate of the musical value of the work. Because of inadequate rehearsals, he said, the performance could not be first class; to get a first-class performance would cost too much to the broadcasting company.

One witness was called to prove that at present broadcasting was not in a sufficiently efficient state to do justice to orchestra and musical chorus ensembels as regards tone and distinctness. He believed that the radio could not get purity of tone nor catch the quality of the work presented.

"If the music is not well performed," the witness said, "it does not tempt the public to buy copies of the music, because they have been disappointed by its quality. I have had experience from concert management that broadcasting before the date of a concert very seriously affected the attendance at the concert. That is the experience of ticket agencies for concerts."

Indian Music Monday

Indian music, honoring Colorado Day, will be given Monday night, by Dr. Harold Loring, noted authority on "the vanishing race" and his group of Sioux from Indian Hills. Colo. Singers and pianists of international note from the Artists' colony, Indian Hills, will assist Dr. Loring.

Gonzales and Barcelonians

Tangos, Spanish waltzes and Mexican foxtrots will be featured over KOA Tuesday and Saturday nights when Chief Gonzales and his Barcelonians broadcast their regular dance programme from the El Patio ballroom, Lakeside.

KPO's Saturday Night Programmes Enjoyed By Many

KPO's Saturday night Goodrich Cord Orchestra programmes of unusual dance music arrangements have become an important radio feature in hundreds of Western communities, according to letters received by the sponsors, the B. F. Goodrich Rubber Company.

Under the capable direction of Cyrus Trobbe, violinist and leader of the Palace Hotel Concert Orchestra for many years, the Goodrich Silvertown Cord Orchestra has been presenting from KPO on Saturday nights a type of dance music radically different from what is usually sent out in radioland. The orchestra itself is a departure from the usual type of dance orchestra in that woodwinds and strings are the dominant instruments.

Unique dance travesties, syncopated classics with preliminary renditions by Trobbe of the compositions in their original form, waltzes and old-time dance compositions, feature the Goodrich programme.

KPO is being heard in the Hawaiian Islands practically every night. This was recently reported by a resident of the Island of Maui in the Hawaiian group. According to a letter received from Mrs. H. G. Van Grundy, of Haiku, Maui, KPO comes in with good loud speaker volume almost every evening. "We enjoy your programmes out here in mid-Pacific," said the writer. As the Island of Maui is more than 2,000 miles in direct airline from San Francisco, this is declared by radio experts to be unusual transmission for the Summer months, when conditions are usually at their worst.

National Broadcasting Company—(KHQ-KOMO-KFOA-KGW-KGO-KPO-KFI)—8-9 p.m., The National Opera Company, under the direction of Max. Dolin, will present "Lucia Di Lammermoor." "Lucia Di Lammermoor" was composed by Donizetti, the Italian composer. The story of the opera is taken from the novel by Sir Walter Scott, "The Bride of Lammermoor." The story is of intrigue and hate. Lucia is secretly in love with Sir Edgar of Ravenswood, who has been deprived of his estates by her brother, Sir Henry Ashton. Through further treachery Sir Henry forces her into marriage with Lord Arthur Bucklaw, his object being to save himself from disgrace through Bucklaw's political influence. As the weddina is completed Sir Edgar of Ravenswood stalks into the banquet hall to claim his bride but to his horror he finds her married. Lucia realizes that she has been deceived and the horror of the situation so works upon her that she goes out of her mind and stabs the bridegroom. She never recovers from her insanity and later Ravenswood hears that Sir Henry Ashton has left Scotland for good and also that Lucia is dead. He has nothing left to live for, so he commits suicide. The "Sextette" and the "Mad Song" are the best known numbers, although there are several others that have become popular.

FINE WOODWORK

DOORS

The Door That Cannot Shrink or Swell, Warp or Sag

That may seem like a pretty large specification—but you're safe when you specify Lemon, Gonnason doors! We use lumber only from the finest and softest logs, and our workmen are highly skilled. But the real secret lies in the drying. We have installed a big modern dry-kiln, scientifically equipped with the most delicate instruments. The lumber is seasoned to just the right requirement to prevent further loss or absorption of moisture, during the stress of useage. A Lemon, Gonnason door always hangs right—doesn't stick or jam annoyingly. Foresight demands "Lemon, Gonnason."

Figures Show Trend of Car and Truck Buying

Remarkable Increase in Number of Closed Autos Compared With Open Vehicles Accentuated by Latest Figures—More Power Insistent Demand

By P. J. DUGGAN

Ten years ago two automobiles out of every 100 produced were closed and ninety-eight were open cars. Last year seventy-two per cent of all passenger cars produced in the United States, and probably fifty per cent of all produced in Canada, were closed models. Truly Dame Fashion rules in the motor world as well as in purely feminine circles.

Is the ever-increasing trend for closed cars dictated by fashion or utility? Fashion would certainly appear to have the deciding vote if one can judge from a comparison of the production figures for the United States and Canada. Logically Canada, with a climate, in general, cooler than the U.S.A., would demand a greater proportion of closed cars, but although the Dominion shows an increasing preference for closed cars year by year, she still runs behind the United States in percentage of closed cars to total output.

The following table shows the percentage of closed cars produced in Canada and U.S.A.: U.S. and Canada combined—1920, 17 per cent;* 1921, 22 per cent; 1922, 30 per cent; 1923, 34 per cent; 1924, 43 per cent; 1025, 56 per cent; 1926, 72 per cent. Canada only—1920, 10 per cent; 1921, 16 per cent; 1922, 20 per cent; 1923, 26 per cent; 1924, 32 per cent; 1925, 40 per cent; 1926, 55 per cent.

*Figures for this year U.S. production only.

Although many of the open cars produced in Canada are for the export trade, the Dominion is still behind the United States in the preference for closed models, but the trend in both countries still strongly favors the closed type.

TWO CARS PER FAMILY

Another trend that is becoming more and more marked each year is that of multiple car ownership in families. In the U.S.A. 55.7 per cent of all families own a car and 18 per cent of all car owning families own more than one car. The Canadian Business Research Bureau estimates that in Canada 36.5 per cent of all families own a car. Figures showing the number of Canadian families owning more than one car are not available, but the percentage will be much lower than in the United States, even though the trend towards multiple car ownership is rapidly growing in Canada. Apart from the very obvious reasons for owning two or more passenger cars, many valid reasons were discovered in a recent survey of car owners.

The commonest reason given was, of course, one car for professional and one for the family. Smaller car for trips in which one or two members of the family participate and larger car for family use. A good percentage of doctors use two cars, a custom also spreading among travelling salesmen and others needing a car every day. In addition the smaller car has a distinct advantage over the larger car in the ease with which it can be parked on busy city thoroughfares. Since the motor car long since ceased to be a luxury, the number of cars which a family can profitably use is limited, almost entirely, to their ability to purchase them.

MULTIPLE CAR OWNERS

Each year sees an increase in the purchasing power of every dollar spent in buying a car, so that the number of multiple car owners among Canadian families is certain to steadily increase. With one passenger car to every two and three-quarter families, compared to one to every one and a half families in the U.S.A., the Dominion field can stand much intensive cultivation.

It is estimated that close upon a thousand people in the City of Toronto own three or more passenger cars. This total will include the owners of fleets of taxis.

The recently issued report of the Dominion Government shows that in 1926 there were nearly neight passenger cars to every 100 people in Canada, an increase of one car to every 100 people over 1925. Inclusive of trucks and busses, Canada now has practically nine motor vehicles to every hundred people, a figure which is only surpassed by the United States, where automobiles are lower both in cost and upkeep.

The Province of Ontario leads in number of both passenger cars and trucks to each hundred people, followed by British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Alberta in the order given. According to statistics, motorists expended last year $26 for registrations and gasoline tax for each motor vehicle in the Dominion.

GREATER POWER IN CHEAPER CARS

Power, more power, is the demand of modern motorists. The increasing use of automatic signalling systems and the ever increasing volume of traffic in Canadian cities are emphasizing the necessity for power—quick, easy starts, quick change from low to second and third speed is a very logical trend today.

Almost more insistent is the demand from truck buyers for power, four speeds and low first cost and upkeep. The maintenance of a quick delivery system, whether solely for one's own business or for general public use, calls for both speed and economy in operation. It was in anticipation of this particular trend that our organization introduced the "Fleetruck" and "Lightruck" models and their success has more than justified our anticipation.

AUTOMOTIVE BUSINESS IN 1927

The prosperity of Canada is reflected in the increased number of cars purchased by Canadians during the first four months of 1927. In that period Canadians bought, for use within the Dominion, 67,798 new automobiles, an increase of forty-eight per cent over the first four months of last year and equalling the total yearly purchase of a very years ago.

It is a splendid tribute to the prosperity of the Dominion, and to the progressiveness of its people that, with a population of about 10,000,000, Canada should rank second only among car owning nations based on proportion of cars to population. Few even of the most optimistic in 1916 thought that Canada would, in ten years, own 728,067 passenger cars, 87,437 trucks, 21,290 busses and 6,781 taxis as she did on January the first fo this year.

Watch Your Fag When On Tours In Present Dry Spell

FOREST fires from smokers result from thoughtlessness and carelessness. They are on the increase. Remedy a bad record by following this code when in the forest regions.

While traveling on forest, brush or grassland, smoke only:

1—While stopping in a safe place clear of all inflammable material, or

2—During or right after a heavy rain.

3—Inside a vehicle on two-way highways, or

4—Above timber line, and after smoking put out all lighted material.

Real Old-Timer Still Makes Good on Road

CALGARY has one of the first automobiles to be introduced into Canada. It was purchased in 1898 by Senator Cochrane, who was then living on his farm near Calgary. He used it for a year and then, having received a title, sold out all he possessed in Alberta and removed to the Isle of Wight to live. The car was purchased by Charles Jackson, of the Salvation Army of Calgary, and has remained in his possession ever since. Last December Mr. Jackson refused $1,000 for the car.

It still runs well, and was used by Mr. Jackson to drive his family (seen in the photograph) in the Stampede procession at Calgary, July 11. The car is a two-cylinder steam propelled machine. The boiler has a capacity of 250 pounds. The original tires are still used. One of them was punctured recently, but was repaired for use in the Stampede parade. Mr. Jackson refuses to give the name of the maker, but has offered a number of garage men $5 if they could tell what it is.

STAR CARS WORK ON MEXICAN BORDER

U.S. Immigration Officers Need Motors Capable of Standing Goff of Patrol Work

Bootlegging, "dope" running, smuggling of humans and many other crimes come under the long list being combated successfully by the United States Immigration Service along the Mexican border.

This organization has built up one of the finest reputations for "getting its man" in the world, and ranks close to the Royal Northwest Mounted Police and the Pennsylvania Constabulary. Probably no other organization for law enforcement works under more difficult conditions.

Particularly on the Mexican border is this the case, for down there the mileage of paved roads is a minimum; the heat is often intense; there is always danger of stirring up international difficulties through clashes with the Mexicans, and there are not only smuggled Chinamen and other aliens to be considered, but the bootlegger and the dope smuggler often combine the smuggling of humans with their regular profession of bringing in dope and liquor.

Recently the U.S. Immigration Service purchased a fleet of twenty-eight Star cars for use along the border, and thereby paid one of the finest compliments to this car that it has ever received. The automobiles are being operated out of the patrol headquarters at Nogales, Ariz., and have a zone of operations that extends for hundreds of miles east and west of that point in country that would make the Bad Lands of the Dakotas look easy.

Star seems to be making a "hit" with law enforcement officers, for in addition to the border patrol, the New York Police Department recently purchased a fleet of sixty-one of these automobiles.

Test Headlights

Headlights will not remain in adjustment permanently, and tests and adjustments should therefore be made at regular intervals. The changing of a light bulb or a blow against one of the lamps will throw a light out of adjustment.

Jasper Park Boundaries Extended to Southeast

Canada's Great Alpine Playground to Receive Addition of 980 Square Miles of Territory, Connecting With Rocky Mountain Reserve

EDMONTON, Alta., July 30.—The national park area of the Canadian Rockies will be enlarged by more than 980 square miles by extending the borders of Jasper Park to the southeast to Rocky Mountain Park, it was announced here recently by J. B. Arkin, Commissioner of Parks of the Dominion of Canada.

"The new park addition, which runs to the Alberta slope of the continental divide, contains some of the most rugged mountain scenery in North America," said Mr. Arkin. "Tallest peak in the area is Mt. Forbes, with an altitude of 11,902 feet. Other high peaks are Mt. Freshfield, 10,945 feet high, flanked by the Freshfield Glacier; Mr. Lyell of 11,495 feet, and Mt. Alexandra of 11,214 feet.

"Tourists from Banff and Lake Louise will be able to traverse the new area north to Jasper Park by a pony trail which passes picturesque mountain streams, Alpine valleys, and towering peaks.

"Canada's chain of mountain parks now covers 10,384 square miles. This is equivalent to two-thirds the entire area of Switzerland and is general times larger than its Alpine or mountainous area. Lying west of the fertile agricultural stretches of the prairie Provinces, these parks attract thousands of tourists from the United States each year. Besides Jasper Park, which covers 5,380 square miles, and Rocky Mountain Park of 2,751 square miles, there are five other preserves, including Yoho, Kootenay, Mt. Robson, Mt. Assiniboine and Waterton Park, near the international boundary line."

PRICE REDUCTIONS AID PONTIAC SALES

$15,000,000 Expansion Programme Gives Better Facilities and Cuts Cost of Production

Price reductions on all passenger models of the Pontiac line, which went into effect on July 15, are reported by Mr. Chris McRae, of McRae-Meldram Motors, Ltd., dealers in the Oakland and Pontiac lines, to have had a quickening effect on sales. From numerous points, it is reported, dealers have requested larger allotments of cars owing to the unexpected demand due in large measure to the lowered prices.

"These reductions have been made possible because of the greater facilities afforded through the recent $15,000,000 expansion programme, explained Mr. McRae.

BETTER FACILITIES

"The new plant for the building of Pontiac cars exclusively was completed in April and is now operating in full swing. While it was expected that the improved manufacturing facilities, making possible greater economies through more efficient operation, would permit reductions, it was not thought that so substantial a price reduction would be possible in so short a period."

The fact that the huge Pontiac plant reached maximum production within sixty days after its completion is one of the rare achievements of automotive history and responsible in a large way for the price reduction so soon afterward. It was the largest single construction contract awarded in the United States last year, and the largest single automotive project ever completed at one time. Large savings were afforded by virtue of almost immediate full productivity from so great an investment.

NEW ECONOMIES

Among the factors permitting new economies in production costs are miles of modern progressive conveyors, innumerable electric hoists, hundreds of improved automatic machines, single handling of all parts and assemblies and virtual transfer of manual labor to machinery.

Oakland enjoys the advantage of few expensive transportation costs in handling material and parts. The Fisher body plant, which builds bodies for Pontiac sixes, adjoins the Pontiac factory, and a conveyor carries bodies directly to the assembly line, effecting a marked saving.

MANY DRIVERS RECKLESS

Three motor vehicle drivers out of every hundred often are reckless, and one in every two hundred is considered quite reckless, according to national safety reports.

STUDEBAKER MADE SHOW IN CALCUTTA

Six Presidents in Daily Service at Famous Marble Palace in Indian City

At the world-famous Marble Palace—the outstanding showpiece of Calcutta—three Studebakers are doing daily service. They are the property of Kumar Jitendro Mullick, and Kumar Dinendro Mullick, owners of the Palace, and among the wealthiest landlords of India.

Two of these Studebakers, which are Big Six Presidents, are but recent purchases. Both were bought at the same time and were sold for a consideration of 12,000 rupees each—or approximately $4,200 each. The Presidents were sold in the face of competition from higher priced cars, to a purchaser to whom money was no consideration.

The third of the Studebakers which is in daily use on the Mullick estate, is a 1914 four-cylinder model which has gone over 100,000 miles.

Kumar Jitendro Mullick was so pleased with the performance of this car that he ordered a new style body to be placed on the chassis. In spite of the fact that a new body delivered and installed in India cost him considerable more than a new Studebaker Dictator Sedan.

Expansion No Mystery

In spite of the fact that many motorists are surprised to note their tire pressure increased at the end of a long, hard drive, tire manufacturers make allowance for this expansion in specifying air pressure for their products. It is friction that tends to create this additional pressure. Warm weather, of course, is responsible for this feature, which seems so mysterious when encountered by the new motor car owner for the first time.

GABRIEL SNUBBERS

Gabriel—and Only Gabriel—Is a Snubber

The Car Dealer's Choice

When your car dealer recommends a set of New Gabriel Snubbers, he does so because he knows that, without them, balloon tires and soft springs cannot give you the utmost in riding comfort.

His test rides have proved to him that the New Gabriels—with exclusive anti-pre-loading brake—leave the car springs free to cushion small bumps, and that on rough roads, their snubbing action stops the pitch and gallop that causes discomfort and fatigue.

Play safe by following your dealer's suggestion—his chief concern is to see that you are satisfied with your car.

Gabriels are always sold on a 30-day, money-back guarantee.

In the Spotlight of highest public favor

more than ever Riding is like flying

New advantages never associated with this price-field, single out the Greater Essex Super-Six with spotlight brilliancy, marking it farther than ever above all comparison.

And public acceptance, intensified by knowledge that the most popular Essex of history was withdrawn to make way for it, has swept the country in a nation-wide buying fervor that quickly outran the greatest of all Essex production schedules.

All that the previous Essex stood for—speed, reliability and a riding ease that was like flying—is here in greater and more enjoyable degree. There is greater power, pick-up and performance. There is greater luxury and comfort in these longer, roomier, more beautifully finished bodies. But no words can adequately describe the totally different thrill of this new transportation. No price comparison can give any expectation of the quality, value and zestful performance exclusive to this car.

Even though production is greatest in Essex history, demand is so large that we must handle all deliveries on the basis of priority of orders.

McLaughlin - Buick Adopt Standard Shift in 1928 Models on View at Local Agents' Garage Tomorrow

UNIQUE DEVICE TO FOIL SNEAK THIEVES

Convenience of Driver and Passenger Considered in Host of Refinements Adopted in Next Year's Model

The 1928 McLaughlin-Buicks will arrive in Victoria today and will be on display in the showrooms of H. A. Davie, Ltd., 860 Yates Street, immediately they are unloaded.

Models of sufficient variation in body style, color and wheel-base are offered to give any McLaughlin-Buick prospect the chance to please his most exacting whim.

The cars are still distinctly McLaughlin-Buick. The hood is higher, however, and the bodies are lower though headroom and clearance remain the same. Colors, while somewhat stronger, are more pleasing, more attention having been given harmony of trimming, and with two-tone interior effects, which are new.

The upholstery is of a finer grade and in some of the models a checked effect is pleasingly worked out.

STANDARD SHIFT

McLaughlin-Buick this year has answered the plea of the Society of Automotive Engineers for standardization, and has incorporated in its '28 models a standard gear shift. Such conveniences as an adjustable steering wheel and driver's seat, lights on the steering column easily reached, indirect and direct lighting of the driver's seat and instrument board, dome light which lights automatically when the curb door opens are some of the new conveniences. McLaughlin-Buick's four-wheel brakes have proven successful and remain unchanged.

The improved six-cylinder valve-in-head engine, with the noiseless and vibrationless flow of power, the new bodies by Fisher, the new McLaughlin-Buick vogue in interior treatment—these are only a part of the story.

EVERYTHING CONVENIENT

The convenience of driver and passenger has dictated a host of other refinements which will be found in all McLaughlin-Buicks for 1928, and in McLaughlin-Buicks only. Everything is conveniently placed, in the new McLaughlin-Buick driving compartment. All controls are readily accessible without reaching or leaning. Lights are centralized on the top of the steering post, where a single switch not only regulates them but turns them on and off.

At the junction of the steering post and dash is the new McLaughlin-Buick two-way lock, devised as a projection against theft. By means of it, the ignition and the steering wheel may both be locked, but it is ingeniously designed to prevent locking of the wheel by the mere act of shutting off the ignition. The McLaughlin-Buick driver may cut off his engine and coast without losing steering control, but he cannot lock the wheel while the engine is running. The new lock is case-hardened, and has the full approval of the board of underwriters, which means that the car so equipped enjoys the lowest automobile theft insurance rates.

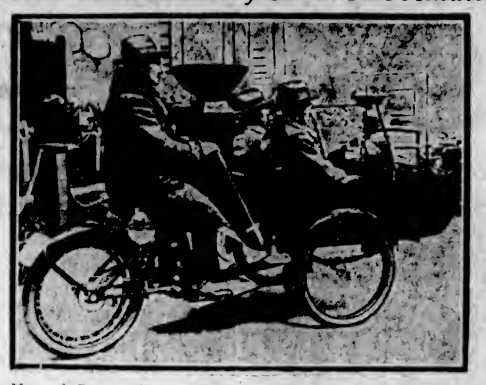

INSTRUMENTS GROUPED

On the McLaughlin-Buick dash, which is simplified by transfer of the light controls to the steering post, the instruments are grouped in three handsome small panels, clustered within a larger panel. Ammeter, oil gauge, speedometer, gasoline gauge and water thermometer comprise the group. They occupy a space so small that all can be seen at a single glance.

In deference to the thousands of women who drive McLaughlin-Buicks, McLaughlin-Buick engineers have adopted a steering wheel which will appeal to the small hand, as well as to the large. The new wheel is designed to fill any hand comfortably, making prolonged drives possible without fatigue.

Open models are more luxurious than ever before, and embody many marked improvements. All open models have forward-folding windshields, with heavily nickeled posts, automatic cleaners, and fittings.

AUTOMOTIVE CHIEFS ANALYZE TIRE WEAR

Short-Lived Treads on Front Wheels Studied at Summer Session of Engineers

NEW YORK, July 30.—It is generally known among automotive engineers that front tire wear often shows peculiarities that are noticeable enough to be called abnormal. These conditions are brought about by some scuffling action of a complex nature that is the result of interference from camber, toe-in or geometrical design of steering connections that prevents true rolling contact, asserted J. E. Hale, of the Firestone Tire & Rubber Company, in an addres at the Summer meeting of the Society of Automotive Engineers.

Whether either or both of the front wheels roll in a plane at an angle from the direction in which the car is moving, whether running straight ahead or turning, the result is a definite lateral friction which tends to deflect the tire laterally.

LATERAL SCUFFING

The tire yields to a certain extent but since the wheel is forced to advance continuously under these conditions the frictional resistance of the rubber is overcome and lateral scuffing results. It is possible that under certain circumstances the scuffing is transferred alternately from one wheel to the other. This, with the constant effort on the part of the tire to restore itself to its natural form after having been distorted laterally, obivously provides a sufficient combination of complex actions to account for the several different forms of wear that are observed.

To prevent abnormal tread wear on front wheels, it is necessary to design the car so that it has rolling contact at all times strictly in the direction of the plane of the tire and with no lateral scuffing components. To accomplish this it is desirable, said Mr. Hale, to have the front wheels straight up and down, with no toe-in when running forward and with the steering geometry worked out so that, in steering to either side from the straight ahead, the direction of the wheels is such as to cause no toe-in or toe-out component.

"CAMBER" AND "TOE-IN"

"In the testing done under my observation," he remarked, "we have used a camber ¾ degree and a toe-in of 1-16 inch. The improvement was so marked that I am inclined to advocate these figures for consideration as a standard. Rolling contact without lateral scuffing when making turns must be provided for in the steering geometry as well as in the toe-in and camber combination.

"After checking many cars with the three-way wheel aligner, it is my belief that very few cars in the hands of owners today will pass this test except those that have been designed in this way. I believe that it is desirable to stress the need of putting the service stations in position not only to adjust toe-in, but to correct the camber of axels that have been put out of adjustment by bending or wear of parts, and also to restore the geometry."

WHIPPET ACHIEVES UNIQUE POSITION

Initial Year Sees Trend of Manufacturers Towards Willys' Famous Youngster

"The trend of the light automobile is distinctly toward the type of construction embraced in the Whippet," John N. Willys, president of Willys-Overland, declared at the end of the first year's production of this car during the past week.

Commenting on the general acceptance of the Whippet, Mr. Willys cites that it has established a remarkable record during the initial year of production, during which time the sales have reached 110,000. This is pointed out as a notable achievement for a car in its first year.

YEARS OF DEVELOPMENT

"The Whippet was brought out only after years of engineering development at our factory," Mr. Willys said. "When we first presented the car to the public in June of last year, it was considered by some as a radical departure from the engineering standard of that date. We declared at the time that it would only be a matter of a short time until other manufacturers would come to realize that Willys-Overland had solved the problem in the light four-cylinder field by producing a car economical to operate, safer to drive by reason of four-wheel brake equipment, and easier to handle under all conditions because its type of construction was along the most scientifically sound engineering principles.

"It is an established fact that since the introduction of the Whippet, many other manufacturers have adopted the Whippet style of construction. Further than that, many American automobile manufacturers are planning to follow the principles of construction so typically Whippet, which embrace low centre of gravity design, economy of operation and four-wheel brake equipment among its features.

The Whippet set the trend which has become generally recognized by the motoring public as well as by automotive engineers as a safe and sound type of construction. More than ever before the traffic situation today is a major problem in all cities. Our engineers recognized this in designing the Whippet and were the first to produce a four-cylindered car to meet those conditions. The Whippet type car meets the present day traffic demands by means of its fast pick-up and get-away, its compactness which permits easy parking, its powerful and speedy engine, four-wheel brakes enabling the car to travel faster without minimizing safety of passengers and pedestrians, and a fuel and oil economy which has set a new standard of efficiency in the light four-cylinder field.

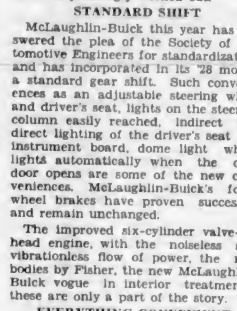

"Although it has been interesting to note the car manufacturers who have recognized the standard set by the Whippet, it will be further interesting to observe the many American automobile manufacturers who are certain to follow this trend which was set by the Whippet a year ago and has come to be recognized as the type of construction which meets the present day demands of the motor car buyers of the nation."

Be Own Oil Rectifier

There is much the motorist can do towards rectifying the oil in the crankcase if his car is not equipped with a device for this specific purpose. Driving slowly up a steep grade will serve to burn off much, if not all, of the diluent in the crankcase. This, however, will not remove the abrasive in the lubricant, and should not be used as a substitute for a change of oil in case one suspects the crankcase of containing sludge.

TILTS HEADLIGHTS

Pulling a lever on the steering column of an automobile tilts recently patented headlights downward.

The Brooks Steamer

The Brooks Steamer, pre-eminent among fine cars, is the ultimate in transportation. It has eclipsed the market, and created a market of its own. From head lamps to tail light the Brooks Steamer is a car with outstanding features, with new ideas and style, ample power at all speeds, no vibration, simplicity of control and no gear shifting.

The Gentle Giant of Motion

With vibrationless effort and developing an acceleration that is quick and positive, is controlled by the touch of the finger.

SPECIFICATIONS

AUTOMATIC FEATURES—
Water, Fuel, Steam and Burner all automatically controlled without any attention from the driver.

GENERATOR—
Vertical fire tube type, 22-inch diameter by 16-inch high, incorporating sediment collector; mounted under hood, properly insulated and carrying sufficient reserve to meet all emergencies. Fitted with heat resisting superheater.

BURNER—
Improved Bunsen type, burning coal oil, gasoline, or a mixture of the two. Lined with heat-resisting metal and fitted with heat-resisting vaporizer.

CONTROL—
Hand throttle conveniently located below steering wheel. Reverse by depressing left foot pedal (no clutch, gear shift or ignition). Throttle fitted with lock.

WEIGHT—
3,800 pounds (shipping weight).

BRAKES—
Foot brake is external contracting; hand brake internal expanding; Brake drums 14½-inch diameter, easily adjusted.

ENGINE—
18 H.P.; 2-cylinder, 4-inch bore by 4½-inch stroke, double acting, simple, with detachable heads, geared direct to rear axle. Stevenson valve gear operates plain slide valves. Crankshaft, main bearings, eccentric straps and connecting rods are mounted on ball or roller bearings. Moving parts submerged in bath of oil, covered by removable aluminum case. Brooks design throughout. This engine gives four steady power impulses per revolution; an equivalent number of power impulses to that of an eight-cylinder internal combustion engine.

FUEL SUPPLY—
Combination main tank and pilot tank mounted at rear. Twelve to sixteen miles per gallon fuel consumption.

CYLINDER LUBRICATION—
Force feed—1,200 miles per gallon.

WATER SUPPLY—
Copper water tank, 19 Imperial gallons capacity. Miles per tank of water—300 to 400 miles, depending on speed, road and weather conditions.

BODY—
Sedan—5-passenger, Meritas fabric, Brooks design; of very pleasing lines and incorporating the latest body features.

EQUIPMENT—
Complete set of Tools.
Spare Rim.
Spare Tire and Tube.
Tire Cover.
Front Bumper.
Rear Bumperettes.
Rear Vision Mirror.
Dome Light.
Electric Windshield Wiper—Tandem type.

THREE WORLD MARKS WON BY PENNZOIL

Transatlantic and Two Transcontinental Parties Used Celebrated Lubricant in Making Records

Three world's records in one week!

In the short period of seven days, automotive and aviation history was made by Clarence Chamberlin and L. B. Miller, and Pennzoil furnished safe lubrication for the three world's records made by these men, according to Alexander Marshall, president of Alexander Marshall & Company, Pennzoil distributers in Vancouver, B.C.

Chamberlin, at the controls of the Bellanca monoplane Columbia, accompanied by Charles A. Levine, his millionaire backer, flew from New York to Germany, a distance of about 4,000 miles. The Wright air-cooled motor was lubricated with Pennzoil throughout the trip, according to Marshall.

TRANSCONTINENT RECORD

While Chamberlin winged his way over the ocean through fog, rain and sleet, L. B. Miller, at the wheel of a Pennzoil-lubricated Chrysler Imperial "80," sped through mud and rain on a record run from San Francisco to New York and back to Los Angeles. Miller established a new record of seventy-nine hours and fifty-five minutes between San Francisco and New York, covering 3,385 miles. On the return trip from New York to Los Angeles, he covered 3,386 miles in eighty-eight hours and three minutes, making a total of 6,721 miles in 167 hours and fifty-nine minutes, one minute less than seven days, an average of nearly 1,000 miles a day, it is pointed out.

Miller encountered snow and sleet in Nebraska, ran through 260 miles of heavy gumbo in Indiana, and had to negotiate eighty-nine miles of detour due to bridges that were out in Arizona.

THREE BIG RECORDS

"These three records were estabhished under the most difficult conditions imaginable," said Marshall. "Miller encountered bad weather on the ground and Chamberlin in the air. Both the Chrysler motor and the Wright motor were put to the most severe test and this test was a test of the lubricating oil used by both engines, as well. The fact that both motors came through under trying conditions is convincing proof of their stamina and of the quality of safe lubrication supplied by Pennzoil."

A NARROW ESCAPE

Horace Annesley Vachell, the author, was once a rancher in California, and became acquainted with a local editor, who had no love of poetry—of the poetry, at least, that drifted to his desk. One day the editor received a poem entitled: "Why Do I Live?" He read it through with impatience, and then replied, by return of post:

"Because you sent your poem instead of bringing it."

Motorless Car Seeks Transcanada Record

RECORDS are made only to be broken. Non-stop flights—Marathons—endurance contests—all have played their part. But it remained for two young men from Amherst, Nova Scotia, to attempt a new record—that of getting the "longest tow in the world."

Frank J. Elliot and George Scott propose to traverse Canada from coast to coast in a motorless car!

The lengthy tow, in addition to being a novel experience for the two young men, will serve as an excellent advertisement for the Province of Nova Scotia. The motorless car is bedecked with advertisements of Nova Scotia business firms, in the form of fish, emblematic of their native Province. Wood, carved in the form of various species of fish caught in Nova Scotia, will bear the names of the many business firms, and will be strung from wires extending the length of the car. Elliot expresses his intention of boosting Nova Scotia as a tourist resort at every opportunity.

The car is an old flivver roadster with the motto removed. It bears the inscription: "The longest tow in the world. Halifax to the coast. A motorless car."

They propose to traverse the 3,000 miles between Halifax and their destination by begging tows from passing motorists. They will accept tows as long as their Good Samaritan will pull their car, and when one tow is completed they will wait for the next.

The motorless car was taken by train from Amherst to Halifax, where the trip will start.

Elliot smilingly remarks, "It won't cost us much for gas and oil, and our motor will certainly be a silent one."

Wet weather will not trouble them, as they will be attired in regular Nova Scotia fishermen's oilskins.

Their entire equipment will be a tire pump and some patches.

PAIGE GETS MODERN WAYNE BODY PLANT

Graham Brothers Turn Over to Motor Company Without Profit Privately Acquired Property

DETROIT, July 30.—Another important advance in the plans for expansion of the Paige-Detroit Motor Car Company was revealed today with announcement of purchase of the Wayne body plant by the motor company from the new Paige heads, the Graham brothers.

The transaction was closed without profit to the Grahams, the three brothers having turned the plant over to the motor company at the same advantageous price at which they purchased it shortly after initial announcement of their plans to obtain control of Paige and return to the automobile manufacturing field. In the meantime, workmen under the direction of the Grahams have been busily engaged enlarging the plant and preparing for installation of modern machinery for the manufacture of custom automobile bodies on a quantity basis.

EXTENSIVE PLANT

The Wayne plant, acquired by the Grahams from Wayne Body Corporation, was built by Harroun Motors and recently was appraised at $1,250,000. The original plant affords 200,000 square feet of floor space and an addition of 40,000 square feet is under construction. The site embraces forty acres, thirty minutes by motor from the Paige-Detroit plant. It is just west of the Wayne city limits on Michigan Avenue, giving a wide thoroughfare into Detroit for motor transport. Main lines of the Michigan Central and Pere Marquette enter the grounds over switch connections to the loading platforms.

Both the plant and its surroundings are unusually attractive to labor. The plant is of the all-daylight type and is equipped with a modern sprinkler system throughout. The town of Wayne affords a fine community centre for the employees, with workmen's homes well above the average, being neat and roomy and having plenty of garden space.

Capacity production at the body plant, with a force of 1,000 skilled men, is expected to be reached during the Fall of this year.

CHRYSLER DISPLAYS A GREAT '62' MODEL

Sweeping Stream Lines With Long, Low Bodies and Small Wheels Feature Exterior

Announcement is made by the Chrysler Corporation that a new model, described as "The Great New '62'," is in production at the company's plants.

Improvements and refinements of the Chrysler "62" represent a combination of many features entirely new to the field in which the car will sell, according to company officials, and in their opinion will make the latest offering stand apart from other cars in anywhere near the same price group.

Powered, as its model number indicates, to deliver a speed of sixty-two and more miles an hour, the new car is declared by its producers to embody all the familiar dash of appearance and smoothness of performance associated with the Chrysler name, combined with even brisker acceleration and instant obedience in both high and low gears.

TRADITIONAL BEAUTY

Traditional Chrysler beauty and charm are accentuated in its lower more sweeping stream lines, advance intimations indicate, as well as in the longer bodies, drum type head lamps of the latest style, and small road wheels. Roofs of closed cars curve downward in the rear, the roof line being followed in the window design. Saddle spring seat cushions, such as are found in cars of much higher price, with fine mohair upholstery in closed and leather in open bodies, add to the comfort and artistry of equipment.

New features are of a kind to assure maximum serviceability, riding ease and life for a car of its class.

Among them are a built-in crankcase ventilating system, larger and heavier transmission, rubber insulated supports at the rear of the engine, ball and trunnion type universal joints and the adoption of a worm and sector steering gear.

Catering to the comfort of the individual driver, the steering column on all cars of the "62" model is adjustable to three positions, while the front seat in the touring car is adjustable to six positions.

CRANKCASE SYSTEM

The crankcase ventilating system is very interesting and Chrysler officials believe it is deserving of the term "unique." The crankcase filler is located on the front left side of the engine. Air is taken in at the front end, through an air cleaner similar to that on the carburetor, and is whirled around in the crankcase, due to the rotation of the shaft. At the rear left of the crankcase casting is a cored hole to which a pipe is attached, leading downward and backward. Air pressure under the hood, caused by the fan and forward motion of the car, creates suction in this pipe and causes free circulation of the filtered air in the crankcase.

Among other engine changes is the improved water circulation thermostat. Radiators used in "62" models are of the cellular type.

NEAR ENOUGH

Modern education was the topic of conversation in the suburban drawing-room.

Mrs. Miggs was saying that it was of little use, while her hostess, Mrs. Biggs, held that it was a good thing.

"Now, here's little George," said the latter. "He's a bright little boy, and though only eight he'll answer any question you like to ask him."

"Well, George, dear," said Mrs. Miggs, "how many are four and seven?"

"Twelve," came the prompt reply.

"There you are," exclaimed the proud mother, "missed it only by two."

PACKARD MANIFESTS AERONAUTICAL BENT

Company's High-Power, Water-Cooled Motors in Great Demand Among Flyers

DETROIT, July 30.—Awakened interest in aviation, due in a large measure to the world attention flying has received through the transatlantic flights of Lindbergh and Chamberlin, has drawn much attention to the aeronautical activities being carried on by the Parkard Motor Car Company.

The first Packard airplane motor was completed in February, 1916. Because there were no planes in this country in which it might be tested, it was placed in an automobile chassis and established a number of world speed records. A larger engine with several improvements built during the same year captured many more speed records when tested in a racing car chassis, including the mile record.

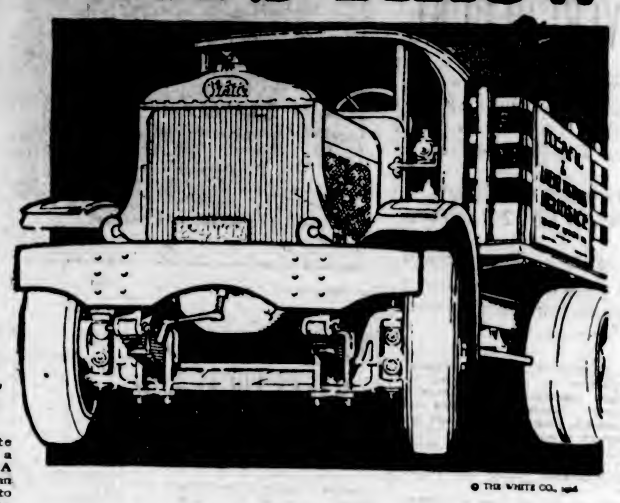

GUIDED LIBERTY MOTOR

This power plant guided the design of the Liberty motor and many of its parts were interchangeable with the Liberty engine.

Since the close of the war the Packard company has been at work continuously on the development of high powered, water-cooled motors which it has sold to the Government in large numbers. The company in the last year has produced and delivered in the United States engines to a total value of more than $2,900,000. It has contracts for motors scheduled for delivery before January 1 next, totaling more than $2,100,000.

An interesting development in this activity of the company is a rapidly expanding export business. Just recently six of its 800 horsepower geared engines were ordered for use in Dornier Wahl seaplanes. These ships are made in Germany and at least two of them are thought to be for use in a commercial line on Columbia, South America. They are capable of carrying twenty-four passengers and recent press dispatches said one of them might soon fly from Berlin to New York.

Follow this easy rule for easier Ford parking

OVER a million Ford owners have learned the secret of easier parking. Most of them long ago discovered that a Ford car which has been allowed to develop chatter is the hardest car in the world to park. But now every one of these million owners has learned that one oil eliminates chatter, and gives the Ford that certain, smooth control which eases it to the curb as it should go—without a tremor.

You too can assure yourself of velvety smoothness of control by always using the right oil—Veedol Forzol, an oil made for Fords exclusively.

Veedol Forzol is a different kind of oil, expressly compounded to lubricate both the Ford motor and the Ford transmission. Unlike ordinary motor oils it keeps the transmission bands soft, pliable, smooth-acting.

If your Ford stops with a jerk and reverses with a shudder when you try to park in crowded traffic the chances are ten to one that you need to adopt this easy rule:—

Ask for Veedol Forzol by name where you see the orange and black Veedol Forzol sign.

SPEED RUN ON HIGHWAY GETS SEVERE REBUKE

National Headquarters of American Automobile Association Turns Frown on Race With Railroad Train

OFFICIALS CONDEMN UNLAWFUL PRACTICE

Use of Public Thoroughfares for Racing Purposes Under Any Circumstances Roundly Scored in Circular

WASHINGTON, July 30.—National headquarters of the American Automobile Association has issued a statement categorically denying that the national motoring body had any connection whatever with the recent attempt of Samuel Klein and Morris Klein to beat by motor the fast train schedule between Chicago and Los Angeles.

"Not only did we have no connection, officially or unofficially, with this regrettable incident, but it is positively the policy of the American Automobile Association to use all its influence, and that of its 900 affiliated motor clubs, to prevent the use of the public highways for speedway purposes at any time and under any circumstances," the American Automobile Association declared. Following is the text of the statement:

FATAL RACE

"Recently Mr. Samuel Klein of Chicago was killed and his father Morris Klein, was seriously injured when an automobile in which they were attempting to clip seven hours from the train record between Chicago and Los Angeles was wrecked in Kansas.

"Unfortunately, some of the publicity that went out in connection with this serious accident carried information to the effect that the race was being made under the auspices of the American Automobile Association, and was checked at various points along the route by American Automobile Association officials.

"In the interest of safety on the highways and in order that the attitude of this Association may be definitely on record, we cannot too strongly stress the fact that this race was neither approved, sanctioned or handled by officials of the American Automobile Association or by officials of the American Automobile Association contest board, which regulates and sanctions official automobile racing in America. Furthermore, neither the Association nor its contest board will sanction, recognize or assist in the handling of any races or speed trials upon the traveled highways.

CERTAIN RACES SANCTIONED

"As is well known, this Association, through its contest board, officially sanctions automobile races, speed tests and endurance tests on speedways and tracks protected and reserved exclusively for that purpose. These events are surrounded with every precaution and every protection, not only as regards those actively participating in them, but as regards the general public. There is no connection whatever between them and the unlicenced use of the public highway for the making of speed records."

FREIGHTING PLANES

What is considered to be the world's record for freight-carrying airplanes was made recently when the sixteen miles between Paris and Brussels was covered in sixty-three minutes.

BROOKS' STEAM CAR MAKES LOCAL BOW

Simplicity of Operation and Beauty of Design Attract Great Inetrest

Comfort, beauty of design, and simplicity of operation is but a mere expression that describes the new Brooks steam car now being demonstrated to Victorians by Messrs. Corbett and Holmes, 1052 Fort Street, newly appointed local distributors. It is a purely Canadian product, turned out of the Brooks factory at Stratford, Ontario, and it is being developed entirely by Canadians.

The Brooks steamer does not require mechanical knowledge to operate, and the simplicity of this style over the internal combustion engine is a feature that attracts the attention of all those interested in the motor world. It functions smoothly, rides with perfect ease and, in fact, the sensation is that of being in a perfect carriage and pushed along the highway without the aid of any automotive force.

SIMPLE OPERATION

As shown by a demonstration given on Thursday, the Brooks steamer is the last word in beauty of design, and the operation is very simple. The whole range of power is controlled by finger lever on the steering wheel. The gears are always in mesh, and the power is not separated from the load in order to change the car speed.

Power is built up in advance, and is ready for instantaneous application to the rear wheels. Power is not dependent upon the speed of a fly wheel, which can be accelerated only after the critical emergency has arisen. The maximum torque can be applied to the wheels under the most adverse conditions, giving fullest efforts at lowest speeds—at one mile an hour if the hill or mud requires it—without relation to the speed of the engine.

The Brooks steamer will be on display at the new distributors, Messrs. Corbett and Holmes, from and after Monday.

Retard Spark At Start

Before touching the button which sets the electric cranking motor in action, care should be specially taken always to have the spark retarded. As a rule the electric motor is strong enough to resist the back kick and even carry the piston past the dead centre, and as the result of this the starting motor is likely to be torn to pieces and ruined.

REMOVE MUD STAINS

Mud stains should be removed at the first possible moment after the mud has fastened itself upon the body of the car.

Motor Cars Exceed Phones and Radios In Smaller Cities

Residents of cities with populations less than 100,000 use more motor cars than they do telephones, pianos or phonographs, according to a report on a national survey just received by the Automobile Club of Washington. Contrarily, in cities where the population exceeds the 100,000 mark the automobile ranks third, with phonographs leading and telephones coming second, the report says. Communities with less than 1,000 dwellers average 60.4 motor cars, 54.3 telephones, 36.9 pianos, 29 phonographs and 18.7 radios. A similar ratio holds true until the 10,000 to 25,000 class is reached, where phonographs are third and telephones second. "This condition is attributed to the more extensive transportation services available in large cities as well as to the nearness of entertainment features," the report says. "An automobile is almost a necessity for rural dwellers and often takes the place of the other items." In general averages for the entire country, however, the telephone assumes the commanding position, with the automobile second, the phonograph third, piano fourth, and radio last, the survey concludes.

HUDSON-ESSEX ENDS BIGGEST HALF YEAR

170,000 Six-Cylinder Cars Built and Shipped to All parts of the World

Hudson-Essex closed on June 30 the biggest and most successful half year in its entire history, with between 165,000 and 170,000 six-cylinder cars built and shipped to all parts of the world.

Despite this extremely large six-cylinder volume, the company has been continuously behind the public demand for its cars, particularly the Essex, according to Hudson officials. The estimates are that the public would have bought 40,000 or 50,000 additional cars if they had been available.

REARRANGED PLANT

It was in view of this demand for the cars that the Essex plant was rearranged and enlarged. At the same time the Essex cars themselves were made more powerful and attractive and a plan of manufacturing laid out which is designed to effect prompt delivery to all buyers.

From all important centres of Canada and the United States, the orders are pouring in for these new Essex Super-Sixes at a rate approximately twice that of a year ago.

"The feature of the year," said Mr. A. W. Carter, Hudson-Essex distributor, "is the great stride ahead made by Hudson-Essex. As soon as these cars were displayed at the New York Show last January, it was immediately apparent that a season of success was ahead. The Hudson-Essex show booth was the centre of attraction. From the minute the show opened the public continuously demanded more Essex cars than Hudson could manufacture.

STILL GOING AHEAD

With such success, nine out of ten business concerns would have been more than satisfied, but the Hudson organization went ahead with its programme of consistent improvement. Now these new Essex Super-Sixes are here, and are being greeted with an enthusiasm exceeding anything we have previously known.

"Essex is not a small or light car: it is a sturdy, roomy, rugged automobile, with 2,400 pounds of weight; an abundance of horse-power, big, strong axles, frames and other units. It is meant for hard, exacting service, and yet it has a velvety smoothness and driving ease that make it equally the car for the boulevard."

Tons of Broken Glass Picked Up In Detroit Streets

No less than four tons of smashed windshields, broken bottles and other glass have been collected from the streets of Detroit in three months, according to the Detroit Automobile Club, which runs a "glass patrol" for the special purpose of keeping shattered glass off the pavements. Placed in service in February, the patrol's big truck circulates throughout the city, cleaning up the broken fragments so commonly seen after mishaps. Automotive experts of Detroit assert that these figures, the first of their kind collected, reveal the magnitude of the glass threat to the tires of passing cars. They also find, in the glass patrol's work, evidence in favor of the use in automobile windshields and windows of safety glass, which because of its triplex construction does not shatter upon impact.

BUYERS GIVEN BIG BARGAINS IN NEW MOTORS

BETTER BARGAINS CONTINUALLY SEEN

Indications Point to Peak Labor Employment During Midfall Rush at Many of Detroits' Great Plants

DETROIT, July 30.—Price war talk, so prevalent during the early weeks of the year, has become a mere whisper, with no prospects of such a condition materializing in the automobile industry. Manufacturers are now working in harmony to a greater degree than heretofore. Competition is devoid of anything resembling a war of prices. It is true prices in some lines of automobiles have been reduced, but in not a singue case was the reduction an invitation to battle with some close competitor.

LESSEN COST

Automobile producers are continually watching for an opportunity to lessen the cost of their cars, and with every reduction comes an increased volume of business. The manufacturer loses nothing and the public profits.

New cars are being offered—better mechanically and from a beauty point as well.

It is true that in a very few cases prices have been increased, but in every instance the purchaser is being given additional value in additional accessories.

A serious situation for parts and accessories manufacturers is the result of the present hand-to-mouth buying attitude of automobile builders, according to reports from this branch of the industry. Plans are now under way to prevent a repetition of the situation during the last half of the year that was experienced in the first six months. Then it was found that, despite the heavy volume of business, profits were conspicuously absent and in many places losses were incurred.

A UNITED FRONT

This condition has brought parts men to a realization that the time has arrived when they must, through a united front, make vehicle manufacturers realize the position in which they are placed. Not a few of the parts and accessories producers are of the belief that they are the real losers when a price reduction on automobiles is announced.

Employment in the various automobile plants and accessory shops in Detroit last week experienced a healthy increase of 12,298. This brought the total number employed up to 194,704.

With many of the larger plants about to get into production of their new lines, and with the recalling of Ford workmen to the plants within the next few weeks, every indication points to the belief that in Midfall a high employment mark for all time will be hung up. The city of Detroit has ordered 125 new street cars to prepare for the expected rush.

German builders have developed several small types of Diesel engines for use with road rollers, concrete mixers and other industrial machinery.

Steel in Ancient India

Archaeologists believe that steel was first manufactured in India at least 10,000 years ago. From that time until the beginning of the past century it was used solely for weapons of war. It was in the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries that methods of producing it in large quantities were discovered.

SPEED RUN ON HIGHWAY GETS SEVERE REBUKE

National Headquarters of American Automobile Association Turns Frown on Race With Railroad Train

Use of Public Thoroughfares for Racing Purposes Under Any Circumstances Roundly Scored in Circular

WASHINGTON, July 30.—National headquarters of the American Automobile Association has issued a statement categorically denying that the national motoring body had any connection whatever with the recent attempt of Samuel Klein and Morris Klein to beat by motor the fast train schedule between Chicago and Los Angeles.

"Not only did we have no connection, officially or unofficially, with this regrettable incident, but it is positively the policy of the American Automobile Association to use all its influence, and that of its 900 affiliated motor clubs, to prevent the use of the public highways for speedway purposes at any time and under any circumstances," the American Automobile Association declared. Following is the text of the statement:

FATAL RACE

"Recently Mr. Samuel Klein of Chicago was killed and his father Morris Klein, was seriously injured when an automobile in which they were attempting to elip seven hours from the train record between Chicago and Los Angeles was wrecked in Kansas.

"Unfortunately, some of the publicity that went out in connection with this serious accident carried information to the effect that the race was being made under the auspices of the American Automobile Association, and was checked at various points along the route by American Automobile Association officials.

"In the interest of safety on the highways and in order that the attitude of this Association may be definitely on record, we cannot too strongly stress the fact that this race was neither approved, sanctioned or handled by officials of the American Automobile Association or by officials of the American Automobile Association contest board, which regulates and sanctions official automobile racing in America. Furthermore, neither the Association nor its contest board will sanction, recognize or assist in the handling of any races or speed trials upon the traveled highways.

CERTAIN RACES SANCTIONED

"As is well known, this Association, through its contest board, officially sanctions automobile races, speed tests and endurance tests on speedways and tracks protected and reserved exclusively for that purpose. These events are surrounded with every precaution and every protection, not only as regards those actively participating in them, but as regards the general public. There is no connection whatever between them and the unlicenced use of the public highway for the making of speed records."

FREIGHTING PLANES

What is considered to be the world's record for freight-carrying airplanes was made recently when the sixteen miles between Paris and Brussels was covered in sixty-three minutes.

BROOKS' STEAM CAR MAKES LOCAL BOW

Simplicity of Operation and Beauty of Design Attract Great Inetrest

Comfort, beauty of design, and simplicity of operation is but a mere expression that describes the new Brooks steam car now being demonstrated to Victorians by Messrs. Corbett and Holmes, 1052 Fort Street, newly appointed local distributors. It is a purely Canadian product, turned out of the Brooks factory at Stratford, Ontario, and it is being developed entirely by Canadians.

The Brooks steamer does not require mechanical knowledge to operate, and the simplicity of this style over the internal combustion engine is a feature that attracts the attention of all those interested in the motor world. It functions smoothly, rides with perfect ease and, in fact, the sensation is that of being in a perfect carriage and pushed along the highway without the aid of any automotive force.

SIMPLE OPERATION

As shown by a demonstration given on Thursday, the Brooks steamer is the last word in beauty of design, and the operation is very simple. The whole range of power is controlled by finger lever on the steering wheel. The gears are always in mesh, and the power is not separated from the load in order to change the car speed.

Power is built up in advance, and is ready for instantaneous application to the rear wheels. Power is not dependent upon the speed of a fly wheel, which can be accelerated only after the critical emergency has arisen. The maximum torque can be applied to the wheels under the most adverse conditions, giving fullest efforts at lowest speeds—at one mile an hour if the hill or mud requires it—without relation to the speed of the engine.

The Brooks steamer will be on display at the new distributors, Messrs. Corbett and Holmes, from and after Monday.

Retard Spark At Start

Before touching the button which sets the electric cranking motor in action, care should be specially taken always to have the spark retarded. As a rule the electric motor is strong enough to resist the back kick and even carry the piston past the dead centre, and as the result of this the starting motor is likely to be torn to pieces and ruined.

REMOVE MUD STAINS

Mud stains should be removed at the first possible moment after the mud has fastened itself upon the body of the car.

Motor Cars Exceed Phones and Radios In Smaller Cities

Residents of cities with populations less than 100,000 use more motor cars than they do telephones, pianos or phonographs, according to a report on a national survey just received by the Automobile Club of Washington. Contrarily, in cities where the population exceeds the 100,000 mark the automobile ranks third, with phonographs leading and telephones coming second, the report says. Communities with less than 1,000 dwellers average 60.4 motor cars, 54.3 telephones, 36.9 pianos, 29 phonographs and 18.7 radios. A similar ratio holds true until the 10,000 to 25,000 class is reached, where phonographs are third and telephones second. "This condition is attributed to the more extensive transportation services available in large cities as well as to the nearness of entertainment features," the report says. "An automobile is almost a necessity for rural dwellers and often takes the place of the other items." In general averages for the entire country, however, the telephone assumes the commanding position, with the automobile second, the phonograph third, piano fourth, and radio last, the survey concludes.

HUDSON-ESSEX ENDS BIGGEST HALF YEAR

170,000 Six-Cylinder Cars Built and Shipped to All parts of the World

Hudson-Essex closed on June 30 the biggest and most succesaful half year in its entire history, with between 165,000 and 170,000 six-cylinder cars built and shipped to all parts of the world.

Despite this extremely large six-cylinder volume, the company has been continuously behind the public demand for its cars, particularly the Essex, according to Hudson officials. The estimates are that the public would have bought 40,000 or 50,000 additional cars if they had been available.

REARRANGED PLANT

It was in view of this demand for the cars that the Essex plant was rearranged and enlarged. At the same time the Essex cars themselves were made more powerful and attractive and a plan of manufacturing laid out which is designed to effect prompt delivery to all buyers.

THE CANADIAN-BUILT CHRYSLER FOR CANADIANS

On Waterways En Route to Ingenika Mines

Findlay Forks at Junction of Peace, Parsnip and Findlay Rivers.

FERGUSON MINE PROMISES WELL

Prof. J. M. Turnbulls Report on Ingenika Property Is Satisfactory—Water Transportation

The Ferguson Mine in the Ingenika district, held under option by the Selkirk Mining Syndicate, Limited, with headquarters in this city, is again attracting attention this season, more particularly perhaps because the Peace River and adjacent sections of the country are very much in the public eye at present. The Ferguson group consists of thirty-five claims located thirty-six miles northwest of Fort Grahame on the Ingenika River.

Following the taking of the option on the group by the present holders, Professor J. M. Turnbull, noted geologist and mineralogist, visited the property and made an examination preliminary to reporting upon the showings. In his report he says the showings occur on a knoll composed chiefly of limestone. The ore bodies consist of fissure veins and shear zones in which galena zinc blends and a slight amount of copper pyrite form the valuable minerals.

The knoll is surrounded by a wild area of deep wash so that the showings cannot be traced on the surface for more than about 300 or 400 feet. Under these conditions underground work alone will reveal, he points out, the full extent of these bodies.

GOOD PROMISE AT DEPTH

But in this connection Professor Turnbull says the mineralization is such that a continuation at depth is likely to be good. It is, he adds, a type of ore that should have a reasonably long vertical range and extend to reasonable depth. He sees no reason for anticipating that the ore bodies should end with the stretches which have been exposed by erosion. In a northerly direction particularly, the ore is exposed in all the five veins right up to the edge of the wash covering.

He calls attention also to the fact that the ore in Number Four vein appears to be improving in this direction showing a mineralized width of thirty feet in the most northerly cut, and the full width not exposed, with signs that it may prove much wider. It is also indicated, he says, by the dip of the veins that at no great depth the veins may run together.

Development will be comparatively simple, Professor Turnbull says, and should not represent a high charge per ton. The treatment problem is also, according to his report, not likely to be a difficult one, and $25,000, he thinks, should go a long way towards assuring the character, values and sufficient tonnage to start on.

While transportation will likely be solved in the way of railway construction within a reasonable time, Professor Turnbull believes that with some slight improvements that it would be possible to ship by the Ingenika, the Findlay and the Peace Rivers.

EASY OF EXTRACTION

Speaking of the property, Mr. C. W. Frank, manager of the Selkirk Mining Syndicate, says that the sampling done by Professor Turnbull would indicate that the property should rank among the big silver-lead mines now known, including the Bunker Hill, the Sullivan and the Hecla. In the case of the Ferguson mine, it is pointed out that there is not the complex character in connection with the ore that is met with in the Sullivan at Kimberley, and that therefore the extraction of the mineral contents is attended with far less expense.

On this subject of values, while the ore that has so far been taken out is from open cuts near the surface where leaching has no doubt had the effect of reducing the values very decidedly, the results are gratifying.

At the intersection of Nos. 2 and 3 veins, a great width of heavy mineralization of lead and zinc is exposed. On one cut from the foot wall side of No. 2 vein, diagonally across forty-nine feet, an average assay gave 3.3 ounces silver, ten per cent lead, seven per cent zinc, per ton. Another cut opposite the above, on the hang wall side, at right angles to the strike of the vein, out of thirty-seven feet, fifteen feet assayed five ounces silver, 16.75 per cent lead, seven per cent zinc. At sixty-five feet south of the last mentioned cut, another open cut, forty feet long and at right angles from the hanging wall, twenty-four feet assayed ten ounces silver, twenty per cent lead and 6.2 per cent zinc, the balance being low-grade ore. The total width at the intersection of Nos. 2 and 3 veins is around 100 feet. The No. 4 vein averages about thirty feet in width and is exposed by open cuts for a distance of 350 feet, and in several of the cuts the vein is mineralized across the total width. The most northerly cut is 125 feet lower than the highest exposure, which cut shows the best mineralization across thirty feet. This increase in lead and zinc values at 125 feet lower elevation on the No. 4 vein is very favorable in regard to continuity in depth.

OFFICERS NAMED FOR SILVER TIP

New Strike Reported on Property Will Be Followed Up by Development This Season

The Silver Tip Mining Development Company, Limited, which has its headquarters here, has just held its annual meeting and laid its plans for the immediate future. The following were elected to office for the year: President, Mr. A. T. Abbey; managing director, Mr. George E. Winkler; directors, Messrs. C. W. Frank, Edwin A. Hiscocks and Cyrus H. Bowes.

Mr. J. V. Clegg, the mine superintendent at the Silver Tip property, reported by wire and letter recently to the effect that rich ore carrying silver sulphides and native silver was struck in the Clegg tunnel. The full width has not yet been explored. The vein looks strong and is well mineralized, according to the last news received, full particulars of which will be given when the vein is fully crosscut.

The new strike was made on the Clegg No. 1 vein. The tunnel parallels the strike of the vein, the first crosscut, about sixty feet from the portal, revealed a width of six feet of ore averaging in all values $42.50 a ton. The second crosscut is fifty feet west along the strike of the vein and about seventy-five feet vertical depth. It is apparent from Mr. Clegg's letter that at this point the vein is much richer and wider.

The Silver Tip company intends to continue development work by drifting on the ore now struck in a westerly direction. Considerable depth can thus be effected. The management also plans to continue the May P. J. crosscut tunnel which was driven 232 feet last Summer. The objective point should be reached in another twenty feet which will give ninety feet vertical depth.

STEWART ADDS TO ITS OUTPUT

Tungsten Will Be Produced at Portland Canal on Commercial Scale

Production of tungsten on a commercial scale will soon be an accomplished fact in the Portland Canal District. Recent developments at the Riverside mine, near Stewart, have disclosed the presence of scheelite, the commercial ore of tungsten, in such quantities that the managing engineer, Mr. R. G. Mellin, has announced his intention of providing facilities in the concentrating mill for saving it, says the Portland Canal News.

Under the old regime, some scheelite was encountered and proved to be somewhat of a nuisance in the mill, as it gathers with the galena on the tables and reduces the grade of the silver-lead concentrates, which are shipped to a smelter on the coast having no facilities for saving the tungsten values. In fact there are only two places on the continent that are prepared to treat tungsten ores. These are in New Jersey and Niagara Falls, N.Y.

VALUE OF ORE

But when there is enough tungsten in the ore mined to make the saving of it worth while, it becomes a valuable asset. Latest quotations for western scheelite are $11 per unit, or about 60 cents per pound, nearly ten times the amount received for the lead content of the ore treated. The amount of scheelite ore now in sight is enough to warrant such changes in mill practice as will be necessary for its recovery.

Fortunately for the Riverside mine, it is situated in the Alaskan portion of the Portland Canal mineral belt, and will escape the sixty per cent duty imposed by the United States against imported tungsten ores.

The principal uses of tungsten are in toughening high-speed tool steel and making filaments for electric light globes. The ore has been considered as being strictly a southern product, and its occurrence this far north is somewhat of an oddity, according to mining men.

HASTINGS ARM HAS PROMISING PROPERTY UNDER DEVELOPMENT

The shaft being sunk on the Saddle property at Hastings Arm continues in good ore, states Mr. P. E. Peterson, who is in charge of operations.

At the point where the shaft was commenced, the ore on the surface was eighteen inches wide. The shaft is now down twenty feet, and the vein varies in width from twelve to eighteen inches the entire distance.

The character of the ore is a high grade galena carrying silver, gold and copper values. The quartz on both walls carry good values.

The ore vein has been exposed on the surface for a distance of 300 feet, and varies from three to six feet wide. Both walls are well defined and numerous branch veins join the main vein.

The high grade, which is on the hanging wall side of the vein varies in width from three feet to a few inches, the average width of what has been exposed is about fourteen inches.

It presents every indication of going to a great depth, and development work will be prosecuted with all possible speed.

The vein is on the contact of the granite and greenstone, with greenstone forming the hanging wall, and in places granite forming the footwall.

The Saddle property is at an elevation of 4,000 feet, right above Hastings Arm, and a tramline can be constructed to tidewater, when ore shipments commence at a small cost. It is ideally located for cheap mining and shipping of ore.

The Saddle is being developed by the Silver Crest Mines Ltd., of Vancouver, who have an option on it. They also have an option on the Silver Crest Group at Stewart, which joins the Big Missouri on the north.

Mr. Peterson is in charge of operations at both properties.

RUBY SILVER SHOWS ON TIGER PROPERTY IN ALICE ARM AREA

That the Tiger Property contains high grade silver ore equal to any yet found in the district, in addition to large bodies of milling ore, was verified last Saturday when Ed. Pickett, the owner, came down with several spectacular samples, says The Alice Arm Herald. The samples are impregnated with ruby silver, and also massive flakes of native silver.

The last find was made in a drift from the main tunnel, and the whole face of the drift is now in ore.

The main tunnel is 140 feet in length and the depth obtained on the ore, 140 feet. Four drifts have been driven from this tunnel in order to locate the ore body which is faulted into four sections. Every one of these faulted sections have been located, and each carries first class ore.

The width of the ore body is from six feet to fifteen feet wide, with an average width of ten feet. The whole body is composed of a good grade of milling ore with shoots of extremely high grade running through it.

Enough ore has already been determined to justify the erection of a concentrating mill. As the chief values are in ruby silver, with native silver ranking second, without copper values, it is an ideal cyanide ore.

The Tiger joins the Toric on the north. It is ideally situated for the erection of an aerial tramway, and is considered one of the most promising properties in the district.

GIVING THE GAME AWAY

Brandon Blenkinsop, a great city financier, had brought action claiming a large sum of money.

He was unable to attend the court proceedings, but as soon as he could he rushed into his solicitor's office to inquire the result.

"My dear sir," said the solicitor imperturbably from behind his mahogany desk, "justice has triumphed."

"Good heavens!" exclaimed the financier. "In that case we must lodge our appeal at once."

Health and Diet Advice

By DR. FRANK McCOY

FOOD'S PART IN MAN'S EVOLUTION

It is apparent that our earliest ancestors lived very much like the apes do today, subsisting mostly on a diet of fruits, nuts and herbs. Probably the first animal food used by man was that which was the most easily procured, such as mollusks, oysters, and other small fish. About the same time, man learned to use different kinds of eggs, such as the eggs of turtles, birds, and even reptiles.

As man's cunning and ingenuity increased, he discovered the use of fire in preparing food. This was probably due to accident, in much the same way it is claimed the Chinese discovered that pork meat is good to eat. Before the discovery of the use of flint in lighting a fire, it was necessary for each tribe to keep a fire constantly burning. This they did for purposes of warmth and, finally, here and there over the face of the earth, our earliest ancestors learned to make food more palatable and more easily digestible through the science and art of cooking.

Raw foods of all kinds require very complete mastication, and this always limits the amount eaten at any one time. Before man learned to cook, he no doubt ate only when hungry of whatever food was available. Regular meal times, started with the advent of cooking, when the family or tribe gathered together at certain regular feasting times. This was probably not more than once a day. At this feast each one filled up on the tasty cooked foods, and from these tribal or family feasts, man learned to gorge himself with food to hold over until the next meal.

With the advent of the agricultural age man learned to grow vegetables and grains, so they could be stored away and used during the Winter season. Foods were grown to a larger size, with a proportionate increase in the amount of starch which they contained. Thus, man began to use bulkier foods, and more starch than the body requires.

Foods prepared by cooking are easily eaten, without much energy used in mastication. In our present age, by the time a young man or woman has reached the age of maturity, the digestive organs are stretched out of shape by three or more meals daily of food taken far beyond the body's requirements. Most people would do well to reduce their food to about one-third of the amount they are using, for as much as we have benefited by learning to cook foods, we must now curb our appetites to a greater extent than was found necessary by primitive man, whose food was scarce and hard to obtain.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Question—Freckles writes: "I have never seen where you have ever mentioned the bell pepper in your diets. We all like this vegetable very much, and would like to know what you think of it."

Answer—Those with sensitive stomachs should not attempt to use any kind of peppers. A fresh bell pepper is the least irritating, and may be used by those who are not affected by the irritation.

Question—Mr. L. F. G. writes: "For the last three months I have been sort of dizzy. I see black spots floating in front of my eyes, and my sight at a distance is sometimes hazy. Am thirty years old."

Answer—First, go to a good optometrist and have your eyes examined. If correct glasses do not clear up the black spots, you can rest assured you are bilious and need to change your diet.

Question—Mrs. H. F. J. writes: "I have a fistula, and the doctor says I must go to the hospital and have it operated upon. I am so worried I have reduced from 220 to 189 pounds during this trouble."

Answer—Worrying is a very poor way to reduce your weight, although you need to take off about fifty pounds more. Do this with correct dieting, and you may be able to cure your rectal trouble through the same treatment. Try the reducing treatment first, and after you are down to normal size, call on your physician again, and he may find that the operation will not then be necessary.

PARAMOUNT FILMS MANY BIG PICTURES

Eleven Pictures in Course of Production at Studios Mark Peak of Activities

With eleven pictures in various stages of production Paramount this week reached the peak of its Summer producing activity. A number of the companies are on location, others are working on the studio stages; prints of several features are in the cutting and titling rooms.

Productions in work, with their leading players and directors, are as follows: "Hula," starring Clara Bow, directed by Victor Fleming; "Swim, Girl, Swim," Bebe Daniels starred and Gertrude Ederle, conqueror of the English Channel, in an important role, directed by Clarence Badger, and Emil Janning's third Paramount production, "Hitting for Heaven." Eddie Sutherland is directing Esther Ralston in "Heaven Help the Working Girl." Chester Conklin and George Bancroft are co-featured in "Tell It to Sweeney," directed by Gregory La Cava.

Florence Vidor is working in "One Woman to Another," under direction of Frank Tuttle. "Beau Sabreur" being directed by John Waters. Jack Luden in "Shootin' Irons" is being guided by Arthur Rosson. Richard Dix is back from location with "Shanghai Bound" company.

Adolphe Menjou is working under the direction of H. D'Abbadie D'Arrast in "A Gentleman of Paris."

ECLIPSED

In the club they were talking of men who, though famous and wealthy, were at the same time very mean.

"I once knew a man," said Butler, "who was so economical that he used to cover up his inkwell between dips in case any should be lost by evaporation."

"But I knew a man," observed Cutler, "who stopped his clock every night to prevent the works wearing while everybody was asleep!"

"I know a man meaner than either of those," said Putler. "He gave up reading newspapers in public libraries in order to save his spectacles."

Poultry on the Farm

By R. C. GIBSON

One of the most profitable breeds of poultry, especially where table fowl are wanted, is the old-fashioned Dorking—the oldest British race of poultry. In this class, size is almost the chief consideration, for to be valuable the bird must be massive in appearance, square shaped and deep bodied, three excellent possessions for table poultry; while they should provide luscious white meat in abundance in the best parts. Dorkings do all this, and the egg yield does more than pay for their keep. They are of remarkably quick growth, and soon attain a marketable size.

Colored Dorkings, being essentially a table fowl, have no arbitrary standard of color, but I may briefly state that the cock has white or straw-colored hackle, striped with black, and breast, thighs and underparts glossy black; the hen's hackle being white, striped with black, with a dull salmon red breast, but body color of a greyish brown, all feathers being laced with black and provided with a white shaft.

For crossing with almost any variety of poultry, notably the old British or Indian game, the colored Dorking is an invaluable breed to farmers. This variety may be hatched as late as August, and the birds are generally hardy, being ready for killing at about four months old. The silver-grey Dorking is by far the most handsome, although it seldom attains the immense size of the colored variety. In my opinion it is, however, a most useful breed, for it is a capital layer when given shelter, while for exhibition purposes the Dorking is in good demand. The cock has hackle, back, saddle; shoulder and outside webs of secondary flight feathers of a pure silvery white, which is enhanced by breast and tail feathers of glossy black, and together with its light flesh-colored legs and feet, is seen to advantage. The hen has a uniform color throughout, the silver being beautifully pencilled with a darker color, while the breast is of a salmon shade. Typical specimens display a lovely soft texture of feather.

The White Dorking, although of attractive appearance, is hardly so popular as the above varieties. The plumage must be of a virgin white and, except the comb, which is double or rose, all other points resemble the colored Dorking. Unfortunately, they seldom attain a large size. As layers they are, however, much in demand.

The Cuckoo Dorking has barred plumage, the ground color being light bluish-grey, and the bands across each feather a darker shade of bluish-grey. The barring should be uniform all over the body, and the colors should merge without any hard line of separation. The variety is now seldom bred, but the same rules apply to its breeding for color and marking as to the breeding of Barred Plymouth Rocks.

There is an old variety known as the red, for which no standard has been drawn up and which is nowadays seldom kept, except in the town of Dorking, and then for table purposes only, although birds of the original strains are of a very high standard of usefulness.

Reference should be made to the fifth toe which the Dorking possesses, and which must be clearly separated from the fourth, and turn upwards, the legs being short, stout and well set. The weight varies somewhat in the different varieties but the standard puts the weight of a cockerel from nine to ten pounds, of a cock twelve to fourteen pounds, of a pullet seven to eight pounds, and of a hen nine to ten pounds. Although the birds are bulky and heavy, the bone of a Dorking should be fine. Coarseness is objectionable.

LIVER DISEASE

Unfortunately at this time I find a prevalence of liver disease, which arises from various causes—overfeeding or too liberal a diet being generally the chief cause, while want of proper grit, tainted runs and overcrowding, are often responsible for the trouble. It will be invariably found in fowls whose combs are discolored, being dark or almost purple instead of blood red. Here let me state that the comb is the best indicator of good health and most reliable test of a bird's general condition. The face will also be pale and even white instead of bright red. Lameness often accompanies liver disease, and it will be noticed that the excreta is of a yellowish color, while the tuberculous deposit in the liver will cause a general wasting.

If fowls are badly affected, it is best to kill off quickly all diseased ones, but in the early stages it is possible with care to eradicate the germs from a flock by careful treatment. I know of nothing better than saline purgatives, such as ten grains of bicarbonate of potash and six grains of Epsom salts twice a day for a few days, alternated with six grains of rhubarb. Also add ten drops of nitric acid to every pint of water given. All affected birds should be isolated and fed sparingly on bread and milk until an improvement is noticeable. A good supply of green food, lettuce for preference, must be given daily; in fact, I will add that if more of this succulent green is given to poultry they would be much benefited.

COLOR AND MARKINGS

The feathering of young chickens is often the subject of discussion, as many novices are ignorant as to the correct plumage of their birds, and are often inclined to unjustly blame the breeder who supplied the eggs because the color and markings are not the same as in the parent birds. In such fowl as the Minorca, Leghorn, Hamburgh, Orpington and Langshan is this very noticeable, for instead of being black when first hatched the throat, breast and underparts are almost white. It may surprise readers to know such chickens will have the colored plumage when fully matured. It should be mentioned that when birds are changing their chicken feathers for adult plumage, they pass through an important stage of their existence, and every care should be taken to avoid draft, chill and damp.

With human beings the importance of good, clean water is fully recognized as one of the cardinal principles of hygiene, and if our poultry are to be kept in health and provide us with good eggs, it is equally imperative that clean water should be given as often as possible. How often have I observed thoughtless poultrykeepers neglect to keep the drinking vessels away from the rays of the sun and filled with pure water. Half the maladies from which feathered stock suffer arise from the neglect of this very simple precaution. Proper drinking vessels, so that the birds cannot foul the contents, should be used, and the water therein renewed as often as possible. I always advise the dissolving of a little sulphate of iron in the drinking water, but an old horseshoe is good.

VIGOR AN ASSET

The importance of constitutional vigor in fowl used for breeding purposes can scarcely be emphasized too strongly. Pullet eggs are preferred by many for hatching from, but the pullet that does not begin to lay until late in the season cannot usually be regarded as the right sort of breeder. Neither is it good policy to use the eggs of pullets which have laid freely throughout the Summer, as they cannot possibly be in the best of condition. Next year these will make your best possible breeders, and having marked them with a leg band, use the first eggs secured from them next season, even if as early as February. The feathers of poultry receive too much attention and the shape too little. A chicken with a wedge-shaped body, and legs placed well out, may well be weeded out. Fowls with narrow head, long beak, and legs set far back, should also be avoided, those chosen having deep chest, erect carriage, wide head and bright eyes. This latter description can also be taken as a guide in choosing the males: the cockerel that has a tendency to lick the whole farmyard is worth special attention in rearing. A vigorous stock means good returns with little money.

Fowl do best on really good land where cattle graze and thrive, for it must be remembered that where the chemical constituents of the soil are favorable to luxuriant vegetable life, there will also be found animal and insect life in plenty. A great many poultrykeepers seem to be of the opinion that light, sandy soil is the most suitable. Such soil is sound and dry, but, as a rule, it lacks green vegetation in the Summer when green food is so necessary, and there is comparative absence of animal life throughout the year. Climate and position must always be studied by the beginner, and sometimes the old-timer, as certain breeds may prove profitable in cold and dry countries, and most will thrive in warm and moist situations.

THE CAUSES OF SMALL EGGS

The cause of eggs being smaller than the usual size laid by a specified breed is, in many cases, to be found in the use of small eggs for hatching, and that by selecting only the largest specimens for hatching for a few years, fowl that will lay large eggs may be produced. It is possible that by taking eggs from hens that lay eggs of good size, mated to males from hens which have the same habit, large eggs can be perpetuated in future generations, but the extra large or unusually small egg from the same hen will produce chickens much alike, and often the smallest chicken, when hatched, will outgrow the other and prove the largest bird when matured.

When we find pullets or old hens are laying eggs smaller than their usual size I think they are being overfed and are too fat or having too much stimulating food before the egg has attained its proper size. When the fault, whichever it may be, has been remedied, we soon get eggs of normal size again. It is well not to use the first few eggs the pullets lay, as they are generally small. It is somewhat doubtful if we can succeed by selection of eggs for hatching in getting hens that will lay eggs of more than the average size for the breed. We will not lose in another direction by getting those which will lay not so many in the year. It is somewhat difficult to get all the good qualities in any one breed of hens, and a large number of large eggs may be as difficult to produce as a chick that will mature quickly and yet grow to a large size. However, thought and experience are good guides.

STOP THAT WASTE

The amount of food—both seeds and soft food—that is wasted during the chicken-rearing season, is astounding. When the seeds are scattered among litter there is practically no waste, but they are frequently thrown down on a hard, uncovered surface, in an exposed place, the result being that a large proportion is taken by the birds. As a matter of fact, sparrows and other birds of the smaller species eat along with the chickens, while crows not only feed and drive the rightful occupants away, but sometimes will depart with a chicken. Soft food often is left exposed for the young ones to partake of at will. A shower of rain may moisten the food to such an extent that it will lose all its value, or the chickens, running in and out of the food trough, will contaminate it to such an extent that diarrhoea ensues. All this waste and all this danger may be obviated by attention to little things which the poultrykeeper often thinks are too insignificant for his notice.

But care pays well in the end, for instance: If the hard corn given to the chickens be supplied under cover and protected from wild birds, and if the soft food is given in a trough so arranged that the youngsters cannot get into it, it will not only prevent waste, but the chickens will thrive infinitely better by a regular and systematic method of feeding.

THINGS WE READ

The poultryman and the gardener are the world's best mechanics, and very much "underpaid."

If the weather is very hot, it is well to starve chickens for thirty-six hours before they are killed.

Never kill a chicken with a full crop. This is sometimes done to add another half-pound to the bird's weight, but it destroys the flavor.

Whiteness of flesh, small bone and offal, careful preparation and evenness in size are the points specially looked for by poultry judges.

There are no definite rules by which one can judge of the age of a fowl which it is desired to purchase unless the breeder has recorded its birth, and you can rely on his word. There are, however, several things which give an indication. As a rule youth goes with freshness, slimness and activity, while the headgear is small and the feathers rather silky instead of being firm. Another way to tell is to feel the cartilage at the end of the breastbone nearest the stern. If this is soft and yielding the bird is a young one; if it is hard, firm bone it is old. Nevertheless, it is often very difficult to distinguish between a late-hatched bird and a well-grown one of the following year.

Scepticism and superstition have no place in the vocabulary of the poultryman. Knowledge is power, experience is of greater value.

The duck egg is the best for the baker, not because they are larger, but better for the baking.

The absence of green food means an undesirable pale color in the yolks of eggs.

Do not waste feed on unprofitable stock. It is only when the returns show a profit over cost of production and keep that birds should be retained.

The vice of feather-pulling may be cured by painting the feathers around the bare places of hens that have had their feathers pulled with a preparation made by dissolving powdered aloes in alcohol. The bitter taste will counterbalance the delight of feather-pulling and no harm will result.

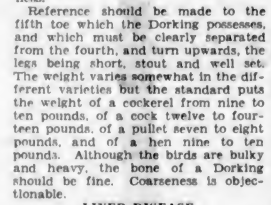

Every householder who has a few yards of ground at the rear of his house, should keep a dozen or so fowl. In every home there are scraps which must be thrown away unless there is a way of using them up.

Keep your eyes open for parasitic life.

NASH SHAREHOLDERS REVIEW YEAR'S WORK

President Reports on Tremendous Sales of Lately Introduced Series and Expresses Optimism

At a meeting of the directors of The Nash Motors Company held July 8 a quarterly dividend of fifty cents per share were declared on the outstanding common stock of the company, payable August 1 to stockholders of record at the close of business July 20, 1927.

The company reported that for the second quarter of its 1927 fiscal year, covering the three months ending May 31, 1927, after deducting expenses of manufacturing, including depreciation, selling and administration, and providing for local taxes, and state and federal income taxes, the net income amounted to $5,566,281.08. This compares with net income for the second quarter of the 1926 fiscal year of $6,010,824.45.

HALF YEARLY INCOME

Total net income for the first six months of 1927 fiscal year amounts to $9,491,735.20 as contrasted to $10,148,332.61 for the first six months of the previous fiscal year. With reference to the condition of the company and outlook for the future, President C. W. Nash expressed himself as feeling very optimistic with regard to prospects for increased Nash sales and the soundness of business in general. "Among the reasons establishing this optimistic attitude," stated President Nash, "is the remarkable reception accorded our new models everywhere. The Nash Motor Company announced three entirely new series June 29 and their display by our dealers all over Canada and the United States immediately created an unusually favorable impression upon the buying public. This is evidenced by the tremendous sales since their introduction.

UNUSUAL SITUATION

As a matter of fact, the great response to this new line of cars has placed our plants in the position of being unable to fill orders, which is a distinctly unusual situation at this season of the year and can only be attributed to the exceptional excellence of the product.

"Never before in all my experience have we risen so high in the soundness of engineering, in the precision of our manufacturing, in the excellence of our materials, and in the beauty of our body designs and finishes, as in these three entirely new series now in production. Nor in any other year was our dealer organization as completely sold out of cars as it was at the time of the announcement, June 29, with the result that the cars now being shipped by them are going immediately into the hands of owners."

ZIPP DEPOT GIVES UP-TO-DATE SERVICE

Demonstration of Modern Automobile Servicing Featured by Enterprising Local Firm

In the short span of one year the young men in charge of the Zipp Service Depot have developed at 921 Wharf Street one of the best establishments in town for the serving of automobiles. They have confined themselves to washing, polishing, greasing and oiling, but their steadily enlarging list of customers would seem to indicate a real demand for this type of service. Starting about one year ago with an old fashioned overhead grease rack and hand grease guns, they have added improvement after improvement until today their equipment would astonish the average owner who has not kept up with the growth of super-service for the automobile.

Everything is done under pressure. The grease is injected into the Alemite or Zirk fittings under thousands of pounds of pressure, which is made possible by the use of a "booster"—a machine which operates off the compressed air line and multiplies the force many times over. Special attachments are at hand so that the machine may be used on any type of grease fitting or connection. The ease and rapidity with which clean lubricant is forced all the way through even the most stubborn shackle bolt or king pin is truly astonishing to the observer. The service work on the springs is handled with another piece of special equipment. This is a gun which operates off the compressed air line and washes and sprays the springs with an oil made especially for the purpose.

Mr. McDermott called attention to the fact that all the greasing and oiling is done from the new concrete pits which have lately been completed. This insures a more thorough job, is easier on the car and enables the driver and passengers to remain in the car and have the work done while they wait if immediate service is wanted.

The wash rack apparatus is just as complete and includes an electrically-driven automobile washing machine which delivers a heavy stream of water at several hundred pounds pressure for washing under the fenders and the under gear. The water is first warmed and has carriage soap dissolved in it. The body is washed with a fine spray under the proper pressure, and the interior of the car gone over with a small electric vacuum cleaner.

Mr. Paterson says, "We will be only too glad to show any interested automobile owner exactly how the plant operates, or if a person wishes to try our greasing or washing service all they need do is phone us. We will call for the car, complete the job, and deliver it back wherever convenient for the owner." It is illustrative of the policy of the Zipp Service Depot that no extra charge is made for this unusual service.

TIRE VALVES OFTEN FAIL

Twenty Thousand Men Required in Alberta

EDMONTON, July 30.—Twenty thousand men, besides the employing farmers and their permanent help, will be needed to harvest Alberta's grain crop this year, according to the Provincial Labor branch. Of these 10,000 are estimated to be within the Province, 8,000 will be brought in from outside and somewhat more than 2,000 have already been placed this Summer in excess of the same date last year.

It is expected that harvesting in Alberta will be fairly general in the last five or six days of August but that the heavy end of the work will come after the first of September. The men already on the land and available within the Province, together with the arrivals from British Columbia, will be sufficient, it is believed, to take care of all the work offering in August.

Immigration Grows

QUEBEC, July 30.—"I believe it is quite likely that the volume of immigration of every class will grow much larger in the immediate future," said Hon. Robert Forke, Minister of Immigration, who arrived here today on the Empress of Australia.

While abroad Mr. Forke visited the agencies of his department maintained in Great Britain and also in the cities of Rotterdam and Antwerp and Paris. He visited Norway, Sweden and Denmark in connection with immigration matters and conferred with Cabinet Ministers in those countries.

LONG VOYAGE MADE BY CRANE VESSEL

Unwieldy Craft Travels 12,000 to New Zealand From Scotland in 110 Days

Probably not since the days of sailing vessels has any craft been so long on a voyage as the crane vessel Rapaki, says The South China Morning Post.

Sturdy and squat in appearance, with low freeboard half as wide as it is long and heavy superstructure that seems as if it might easily capsize in a heavy sea, the boat looks as if she would never dare venture beyond a safe harbor. Yet it was this craft which under its own power crossed 12,000 miles of ocean from Greenwich, Scotland, to Lyttleton, New Zealand, by way of Barbadoes and Colon, in one hundred and ten days.

Braving a terrific storm in the English Channel, fighting her way through Atlantic gales, and when within a few miles of her destination encountering a blow off the New Zealand Coast which nearly wrecked her, the little vessel had an experience equalled by few other boats and proved herself seaworthy beyond a doubt.

"The sturdiest little vessel I have ever handled," said Captain Mack, her commander.

The story of the voyage of the Rapaki contains as many thrills as many a "best seller." It proves that high seas today provide stories as full of adventure and of courage as any which have been told. The voyage demonstrates that not only is the Rapaki a staunch and seaworthy vessel, but that those who brought her safely to her harbor were skillful and stout hearted.

Shortly after leaving the Clyde at the outset of her eventful trip the vessel ran into heavy weather and was driven out of her course. Unable to make headway she resembled a submarine as the sea washed up and over her decks, but the plucky little craft kept plowing ahead under the experienced hand of an able seaman. Several times she lost steerage and on one occasion ran out of coal. Distress signals in the form of rockets were sent up, but all without avail. For three days the vessel drifted and it was not until the fourth day that she came close enough to shore for a lifeboat to be manned and a small supply of coal obtained which fortunately proved itself sufficient to get the vessel into the nearest harbor at Waipiro Bay, New Zealand. Then the little ship proceeded on to Gisborne in the face of another blow. Here she bunkered a full supply of coal, enabling her to make for Lyttleton, where she was eagerly awaited by the Harbor Board, in whose service she is now operating.

R.M.S. EMPRESS OF ASIA

Bringing 1,000 measurement tons of raw silk valued at close to $12,000,000, the Empress of Asia will dock here from the Orient at 6:45 o'clock this morning. A special train of twenty cars awaits the arrival of the vessel at Vancouver to dispatch this valuable freight to Eastern mills. The passenger list of 597 includes many prominent people.

Mayne Island Dance

A very delightful dance was given by Mr. and Mrs. Richard Hall on Wednesday at "The Anchorage," at which the following were the guests: Mrs. West and Master Henry West, Mr. and Mrs. Elvarson, Dr. and Mrs. Rose, Miss Rose and Master Stephen Rose, Mr. and Mrs. Steward, Messrs. Stanley and John Page, Master Allan Steward, Mr. Cayzer, Mr. and Mrs. Foster, Mrs. Twiss, Rev. and Mrs. Porter, Mrs. Wheatley, Mrs. Crofton, Mrs. Best and sons, Captain and Mrs. Gurney, Mr. Tim Gurney, Mr. and Mrs. Houlgate, Mrs. Coates, Miss Kathleen and Master Leslie Garrack, Miss Vera Robson, the Misses York, Miss Taylor, Victoria, Mr. A. G. Brine, of New Westminster; Mr. Bellhouse, Mr. Tony and Miss Bellhouse, Miss Violet Flick, Mr. and Mrs. Anderson, Mr. Wilbert Deacon. The house was prettily lighted by numerous Chinese and Japanese lanterns and shaded candles. Supper was served at midnight. Dancing continued until dawn.

ADA BLACKJACK RETURNS TO DIE

SEWARD, Alaska, July 30.—Ada Blackjack, untutored, penniless Eskimo whose heroism once was a world topic, is going back to Kodiak to die of tuberculosis. On Wrangell Island in 1921 she was a member of a colony planted there. All the others died but Ada. Clothes tattered and face turned to leather by Arctic storms, she was rescued after four years.

Fiat Marine Diesel Engines To Be Made

The new company registered recently under the designation of Fiat British Auxiliaries (Limited), with their head office at 133 Helenstreet, Govan, Glasgow, are to start at an early date the manufacture of marine Diesel engines of the Italian Fiat type.

The company, the initial capital of which is £125,000 in 25,000 7½% Cumulative Preference and 100,000 Ordinary shares of £1 each, has been formed for the purpose of carrying on "engineering, shipbuilding and aircraft building," and the subscribers are Messrs. James Caird, shipowner, London; Mr. J. Howden Hume, engineer, Glasgow; and Mr. Ernest W. Harvey, engineer, London.

It is understood that the work of the new company will consist for a time at least, of the manufacture of marine engines of a similar type to those made by the Fiat San Giorgio Engineering Works, of Turin, Italy, and that the Italian firm are interested in the Glasgow enterprise.

The Italian Fiat engines have been made in considerable numbers within recent years, and of comparatively high powers. At present the company are completing at Turin several twin-screw installations, ranging from 3,000 to 4,400 horsepower, for merchant vessels built in Italy, and they have on hand engines for a number of Italian submarines.

The works, which have been taken over in Govan, were occupied formerly by Howden-Ljungstrom Preheaters (Land) Limited. They are of considerable extent, and arrangements are being made for equipping them with the most modern tools and equipment for the economical production of marine Diesel engines.

Olive Borden Depicts Happy Modern Flapper

Screen Favorite Displays Great Histrionic Versatility as Thrill Seeking Girl in "The Secret Studio," Showing at Capitol This Week

Again the beautiful and dainty Olive Bordon shows her splendid histrionic versatility by essaying and gloriously interpreting a role that is in striking contrast to any she has heretofore attempted.

Those who remember her as the demure Eve in "Fig Leaves," the pioneer girl in "Three Bad Men" and as the unsophisticated Miss of the Canadian wilds, will be pleasantly astonished to see with what dash and vivacity she interprets the part of a typical modern, thrill-seeking flapper, in Fox Films' "The Secret Studio," which will have its first showing at the Capitol Theatre tomorrow.

MODELS OF LATIN QUARTER

In this intensely interesting picture of the romances and lives of artists and models of the Latin quarters, Miss Bordon has the stellar role of Rosemary Merton. Her characterization of the pert, modern girl, who dares to play with fire because she says she can outthink any man, is very difficult, but Miss Bordon plays it to the life.

Not only Miss Borden, but every member of the cast helps to make this picture a very fine entertainment.

ON THE STAGE

The stage attractions this week include several very delightful novelties, introducing Frances Guinan, the dainty danseuse, who created a favorable impression with Capitol patrons on her previous appearance here. Miss Guinan will offer an entirely new programme of dance conceptions. A musical novelty of interest will be offered in the person of Victor Teasedale, and his laughing trombone, and the Robinson Sisters, supported by Miss Meredith, will present a delightful sketch, introducing piano, violin, duets and vocal selections. The Capitol Concert Orchestra will also be featured.

U. S. Commission Orders Cessation of Block Booking Films

According to the decision of the Federal Trade Commission Paramount (Famous Players-Lasky), Adolph Zukor and Jesse L. Lasky were found guilty of conspiracy to lessen competition and restrain trade to interstate and foreign commerce in the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures, and are prohibited from continuing such conspiracy and are ordered to abondon what is known as block booking and from acquiring and threatening to acquire theatres for the purpose of intimidating or coercing exhibitors to book films distributed by Paramount. This is one of the most bitterly contested cases ever conducted by the Federal Trade Commission. It extended over a period of five and a half years. It is reputed to have cost the Government up to date hundreds of thousands of dollars. Also the film company has had no little expense attached to the case.

CLEVER VAUDEVILLE AT THE COLISEUM

Sketch Artists Present Entertaining Bill on Stage and Screen Shows "The World at Her Feet"

The vaudeville bill at the Coliseum starting tomorrow is an exceptionally good one, featuring a sketch called "Strategy," with Jimmie Howard, Betty O'Shea, and Harold Betchel. This sketch is one that will keep the audience laughing throughout and, with such a popular cast, is sure to be a hit. Wally Pullman, the clever boy with the banjo, is another act that never fails to please, and will always draw much applause. Mr. Groves, giving character impressions and monologues, is another very good act that will warrant the approval of the audience. This vaudeville bill, all around, is very high-class, and the management is pleased to be able to present it to patrons.

ON THE SCREEN

Any women, fighting with her natural weapons of brain and beauty, can win any point she wishes to accomplish against the dullards who consider themselves dominant males. A slight pout and flashing eye are the preliminary skirmish; if these fail to start the masculine retreat a few tears can easily be called into play. Then there is the tried and true faint to bring up added reinforcements. More is seldom needed. A variation of the faint is used by Florence Vidor, epitome of brunette loveliness, in her newest starring picture for Paramount, "The World at Her Feet," which will be shown at the Colisuem Theatre all this week. Miss Vidor simulates blindness and through this adoption of a pathetic affliction manages to arouse the jealousy of her discontented husband.

Judge Ben Lindsey Plans Film Career

HOLLYWOOD, July 30.—Judge Ben Lindsey, noted former Juvenile Judge of Denver, is reported to be contemplating entering the motion picture industry. Judge Lindsey would dramatize his many years spent as judge in a juvenile court. He has had offers from several wise producers, who realize that the judge has had a most dramatic and interesting life. "Without attempting to give myself any degree of publicity, I have had a most dramatic life sitting in the courts where the welfare of the children, men and women were at stake. I feel that these incidents could be dramatized. If I do consent to lend my name to the making of a picture it will be for the sake of education and enlightenments," said Judge Lindsey when interviewed.

LIFE AND LOVE IN LAND OF PROMISE

Thomas Meighan Heads Cast in "The Canadian," Story of Vast Open Spaces, at Variety Monday

A tale of hope, of love, of the fight against nature, of a struggle between one man and one woman, all in a land of promise—that's the story told by Thomas Meighan's latest Paramount production, "The Canadian," shows at the Variety Theatre this week.

Taken from W. Somerset Maugham's play and scenarized by J. Clarkson Miller. Director William Beaudine has, from advance reports, brought a real picture to the screen. Following "Tin Gods," Meighan elected to play Frank Taylor, a role which he considered as strong in dramatic possibilities as the earlier character. The entire company journeyed to Alberta, Canada, where in the foothills of the Rockies, they enacted the play in the precise locale described by its author.

STORM RAVAGED WHEAT

"The Canadian" is a man knocked down for the count but fighting back. It seems that a storm ravaged his wheat the preceding year, and he is now working for Ed Marsh in an effort to earn sufficient money with which to start all over. One day, Ed's impoverished aristocratic sister comes to live with him. She and his wife come to a parting of the ways, and, though disgusted on hearing Taylor say that he needs a woman who will work, Nora offers herself, if only he will take her away. A wife in name only, they go to Frank's farm, where the never ceasing struggle with the elements is started once more. He tells her that if they have a successful year, he will be able to send her back to England. She doesn't mention the fact that a check has arrived which makes this possible without his help.

When two natures are so strongly opposed to each other, it is inevitable that a break should come. And it does, but this time, Taylor is the victor. His wife's antagonism turns to respect. Then, a cold breath from the north sweeps down, and in a maddening fight, their crops are destroyed. What happens? Come and see.

PICTURE INTRIGUES BECAUSE OF NOVELTY

Forceful Comedy Disclosed in "Lost at the Front," Showing at Playhouse, Challenges Laughter

A comedy is always one of the most difficult pictures to review adequately, because of necessity most of the dramatic rules are put aside. The laugh is the thing and everything works toward that end.

"Lost at the Front," at the Playhouse Theatre this week, with George Sidney and Charlie Murray co-starred, intrigues because of its novelty. Such things as the radio invention that was supposed to aid Germany to win the war, the efforts of a New York cop to get it away from his friend, Krause, the saloonkeeper; their adventures in Russia with the Women's Battalion of Death; their experiences in the trenches and their efforts to escape dressed as peasant women, form a series of excruciatingly funny episodes.

Sidney and Murray are twin kings of mirth. They have the knack of gaining laughs by all methods—from slapstick to pure characterization. Del Lord directed the picture; he has been an ace director with Mack Sennett. Frank Griffin wrote the photoplay, which is presented by John McCormick for First National Pictures. All the way through it meets the public's approval 100 per cent. That's all that is necessary. No need to go into detail as to any features aside from the laughs and they are there aplenty.

We must not forget the good work of pretty Natalie Kingston, in the feminine lead as a Russian sculptress. She is one of the Baby Stars for 1927, chosen by the Wampas, famous Hollywood organization of movie writers.

You won't make a mistake in seeing this film.

Deutschland Exploit Put Into Pictures

Captain Paul Koenig's exploit of taking the merchant submarine Deutschland into Baltimore harbor and back to Bremen during the war, despite the vigilance of Allied submarine destroyers, has been put into a movie. The film, which bears the title "U. Deutschland," was twice interdicted by the Berlin board of film censors, but has finally been released by the chief censor. Captain Koenig was on the welcoming committee which greeted Clarence Chamberlin and Charles A. Levine at Bremen on behalf of the North German Lloyd, when the two ocean fliers came to Bremerhaven to meet their wives.

The money will be transmitted by the Ambassador to the President of the French Republic, with instructions that one half of it be delivered to the mother of Captain Nungesser and the other half to the mother of Captain Coli.

ALL-STAR CAST IN 'THE MIDNIGHT SUN'

U.S. Destroyer Disguised for Production of Thriller at Columbia Tomorrow

International politics threatened for a time to balk one of the big scenes in "The Midnight Sun," Universal Super-Jewel to be screened at the Columbia Theatre, commencing tomorrow, with an all-star cast. The picture is considered the masterpiece of Dimitri Buchowetzki, who directed it.

In "The Midnight Sun," there is a thrilling scene in which a warship pursues a private yacht. On board the warship is a Russian Grand Duke, while the yacht holds the persons of the premiere ballerina of the Imperial Russian Ballet and Russia's most powerful banker. The girl is desired by both the Grand Duke and the banker.

U.S. WARSHIPS

When the time arrived to "shoot" this particular scene, Universal asked the Navy Department for permission to use one of its warships on the Pacific Station. The Department had heard that the action of "The Midnight Sun" was laid in Russia. As this country is not on official speaking terms with the present Russian Government, the Department hesitated about granting the request. However, when Universal assured the authorities that the period of the play is 1913 during the reign of the Czar, the request was readily granted.

One of the Navy's swiftest submarine chasers was placed at the disposal of the motion picture people—officers and crew—and for perhaps the first time in the history of the Navy certain of its officers took "orders" from a civilian. For Buchowetzki, the director, was given complete authority during the time the chaser was being used for the picture.

DOMINIONS START EMPIRE FILMS PLAN

British Controlled Pictures Organize Associated Companies Overseas to Push Scheme

The first Imperial agency of British Controlled Films, Limited, the new private company, organized primarily for the purpose of distributing British pictures in the Dominion and the Colonies, has been formed in Australia, where an affiliated company, the British Dominions Films (Australia), Limited, has been incorporated, including among its directors Sir J. Morrell, Lord Mayor of Melbourne, and Mr. W. A. Watt, a former Premier of Victoria. A New Zealand company, which controls a circuit of 150 theatres in that Dominion, is also associated with the British Controlled Films, Limited, and, as in the case of the Australian company, has subscribed for shares in the British company. Similar arrangements are being concluded with associated companies in Canada, India, and South Africa, each of which will have facilities for ensuring exhibition in their respective territories.

"Rough House Rosie" Features Clara Bow

Beloved Hoyden and Typical Flapper of Previous Features Graduates as Vibrant Artiste in Alluring Role at Dominion All This Week

The long awaited successor to Clara Bow's highly successful starring debut "It" reaches the Dominion Theatre tomorrow under an alluring title "Rough House Rosie." This young woman who has made such amazing strides during the past few years, is worthy of more than passing notice.

Doomed to failure the first time she faced a camera because her makeup had been applied in the wrong fashion, Clara made a strong comeback in her second attempt "Down to the Sea in Ships" which made the entire amusement loving world sit up and take notice. Since that time, Miss Bow has passed through a number of stages. She became the beloved hoyden; then the typical flapper, and finally the finished artiste she is today. While "It" created all sorts of box office records, critics wherever the picture has played, seem to think "Rough House Rosie" has an even brighter future before it.

BELLE OF TENTH AVENUE

As for the story, "Rough House Rosie" concerns itself with Rosie O'Reilly, a belle of Tenth Avenue, and, more important, the sweetheart of Joe Hennessey, self-styled "coming middleweight champion." The plot develops when an amusement park clairvoyant predicts great fame as a dancer for Rosie. To realize her ambition, she stages a "boxing ballet" with six pretty girls. Booked into a night club "Rough House Rosie and Her Roughnecks" are a success from the start. Lew McKay, a cafe frequenter, attracted to the girl, gives her a diamond pin and—the police arrest her as a holder of stolen goods.

After a night in jail, Rosie is released when McKay confesses and Arthur Russel, owner of the jewelry, refuses to press charges. He offers to take her home in his car and they leave just as Joe arrives with bail money. Flattered by Russell's evident love and impressed by his wealth, Rosie soon finds herself forgetting Joe and no one realizes this more than Joe himself. A book of etiquete proving useless, he tries being a caveman, but discovers this doesn't work, as Rosie hits him on the jaw and he falls to the floor unconscious. Then—but that ought to be enough to whet one's interest.

Conference on Production Costs Reassembles at Los Angeles August 1

LOS ANGELES, July 30.—Definite progress toward a solution of the excessive cost of producing motion pictures was announced by spokesmen for the producers and writers after a conference between the two branches of the industry. Samuel Goldwyn, chairman of the conference, said that the conference had been satisfactory and that "in all the suggestions advanced so far there have been none aiming at a reduction of the quality of pictures."

The conference was one of a series in working out an agreement by which a proposed wage cut in the industry was postponed until August 1 in the hope that other economy methods might be discovered.

Rupert Hughes, novelist and scenario writer, joined the army of doctors in consultation over the film industry case when he gave his diagnosis from the standpoint of the writer. "Any story is better when it is told by one man, than when the bystanders break in," explained Mr. Hughes. "In the movies, however, nearly every story is told by a syndicate. The wonder is that any story succeeds. In the movies the author has his story taken away from him and he is locked out while a gang of butchers cut the heart and gizzard out of it; then they fight one another in putting it together again. They rarely put it together again with any 'go' left in it."

A TRUE SCOT

With a loud squeaking of hastily applied brakes the taxi pulled into the curb, and its occupant clambered gingerly out.

He glanced at the taximeter and proffered the exact fare to the driver, a miserable-looking kind of fellow.

The fare looked at him for a moment. "Mon," he breathed, "ye're a sportsman. I'll say it's tails."

TABLE VEGETABLES LEAD MARKET SALES

Business Is Brisk at Public Market—Patrons Pay Early Visits—Prices Vary Slightly

Table vegetables led the sales at the Victoria Market yesterday, with business being reported very brisk. Early morning patrons flocked to the stalls, making large purchases of choice fruits and vegetables. Prices generally varied slightly.

Raspberries and loganberries, in large quantities, were noticeable, and were in large demand. This class of fruit has passed its peak, and is expected to show a slight advance in price next week. Raspberries were being sold at two baskets for 25c, and in some cases 10c a basket. Loganberries sold at 25c for four baskets.

Wonder beans, a member of the scarlet runner family, were plentiful, and sold at three pounds for 25c. Scarlet runners, at the same price, found plenty of ready buyers. Young green peas, at no variation in price, found plenty of early morning patrons.

Tomatoes, of all sizes and variety, were selling all the way from two pounds for 35c to 25c a pound. Vegetable marrow at 10c a pound, and broad beans at 5c a pound received good patronage.

Local grown peaches at 50c a dozen, cherries at 30c and cooking cherries at 10c a pound moved freely. Some fine early dahlia blooms were noticed. Eggs were holding their own in price.

U.S. Tourists May Stay For Ninety-Day Period

OTTAWA, July 30.—United States tourists may now stay in Canada for a period of ninety instead of sixty days, it became known this evening, following a conference held yesterday between officials of the Customs Department and Dr. P. E. Doolittle, president of the Canadian Automobile Association. Official notification of the extension granted has not yet been made but Hector Carruthers, president of the local Automobile Association, who attended the conference, stated that the usual sixty-day limit had been extended by an additional thirty days, and that this would not put the tourist under any kind of obligation. In order to obtain the extended time limit the visitor has only to go to the nearest collector of customs and convince him that he is a bona-fide tourist.

DISTRICT EXHIBITS TO BE ATTRACTIVE

Will Be Feature of Provincial Exhibition to Be Held Here Next Month

District exhibits will offer greater interest at the Provincial Fall Fair this year than in any year since the fair was held, Mr. W. H. Mearns, secretary, believes, judging from the enthusiasm shown by the record number of districts competing this year. Apart from the rivalry between districts in the battle for honors, the prizes are well worth competing for. Four hundred dollars goes to the winner, $300 to the district taking second prize and $200 as third prize. The sum of $150 is allowed to any district or agricultural society exhibiting in the competition providing their exhibit scores forty per cent of the total points.

The J. W. Woman Lost In Forest Walks Twenty-Five Miles

OTTAWA, July 30—After wandering approximately twenty-five miles through the bush, twenty-eight miles west of Kemptville, while three hundred villagers of North Augusta were searching for her, Miss Minnie Davis, forty-two, staggered in an exhausted condition to the farmhouse of a neighbor late yesterday afternoon. She had left her home yesterday afternoon to go berry-picking, but lost her way.

This morning Miss Davis was reported to be little the worse for her adventure.

NEW HOTEL IS OPEN TO PUBLIC

COMMUNITY EFFORT OF NANAIMO CITIZENS BEARS MAGNIFICENT FRUIT

Magnificent Up-to-Date Hostelry at Nanaimo Is Monument to Progressive Spirit of City

NANAIMO, July 30.—The Malaspina Hotel, a fine seven-storey concrete building built by the E. J. Ryan Contracting Company, of Vancouver, for Nanaimo shareholders at an approximate cost of $250,000, was formally opened this afternoon.

The hotel is situated next to the postoffice, overlooking the waterfront, and commands a wonderful view of the Gulf of Georgia, Gulf Islands and the chain of the Coast Range Mountains in the background.

Four of the seven stories of the new building are confined to sleeping quarters, making seventy-two modern bedrooms with baths and other conveniences in each room. The furnishings are of walnut. Axminster carpets cover the floors and harmonious draperies are used throughout the building. The sleeping quarters are equipped with desk telephones, and the doors are sound-proof.

On a raised floor adjoining the business lobby and in plain view from the entrance is a beautiful palm room with two huge marble fireplaces and ivory pillars for resting purposes, afternoon teas, etc.

The banquet-room and dining-room are on the lower floor, on either side of an entrance hall, which may be used for orchestral quarters. These rooms can be combined for dancing and large functions.

MODERN FEATURES

Some of the features of the new hotel are, a modern kitchen, refrigerator plant, an elevator service with electric brake, eight sample rooms, which can be converted into sleeping quarters when necessary, and a boiler-room, equipped with two large boilers to supply heat for the hot-water system throughout the hotel.

The hotel will be operated by the Canadian Associated Hotels, Limited, and adds a link in a chain of community hotels across Canada, reaching as far as Sydney, Nova Scotia, eastward, and Nanaimo westward.

The name "Malaspina" was chosen from a long list submitted by citizens at the request of the management, who offered a prize for a suitable name. The name Malaspina was taken from the famous Malaspina Gallery, situated on Gabriola Island, opposite Nanaimo Harbor, which is an unusual study in geological evolution. It is a natural gallery 20 feet long, eleven feet wide and ten feet high, eroded out of soft sandstone strata by the sea.

The community hotel movement was instituted two years ago by five citizens, Messrs. F. S. Cunliffe, E. H. Bird, Oliver Eby, John W. Coburn and R. H. Ormond, after they had collected data to show the practicability of such a scheme, they presented the matter to the Board of Trade.

COMPANY INCORPORATED

The latter endorsed the scheme, but decided to take no action, although later, many of its members assisted in the campaign that raised the funds. The committee formed themselves into a syndicate and added to their number. The company was then incorporated and the following elected Board of Directors: President, Mr. F. S. Cunliffe; vice-president, Mr. J. C. Dakin; Mr. John W. Coburn, Mr. Oliver Eby, Mr. R. H. Ormond and Mr. A. O. VanHouten.

A sales organization under the Hockenbury system, with over 100 members, was then formed with Mr. R. H. Ormond as sales manager. A campaign to sell $125,000 worth of stock then opened, and in ten days, the given time, the objective was exceeded by $10,000.

With local citizens holding shares amounting to $135,000, Mr. F. S. Cunliffe opened negotiations with the Canadian Pacific Railway for the balance required to complete the building and furnishings. He was successful, and some months later the company advanced the money at six per cent, for a period of twenty-five years.

MEMBERS OF SOUTH SAANICH INSTITUTES HAVE ANNUAL PICNIC

KEATING, July 30.—The annual combined picnic of the South Saanich Farmers' and Women's Institutes was held today, when about sixty-five enjoyed a full day's outing in delightful weather.

Those who took part met at the Temperance Hall, Keating, at 8:30 in the morning and proceeded to Bellingham by ferry from Sidney. Games and treasure hunts were indulged in on the way, the party arriving at Bellingham at 12:30 o'clock. After a short stay, the return journey was made, and the picnic was continued at the Experimental Farm at Bazan Bay, where, after supper, sports took place. Mr. W. D. Mitchell, president of the South Saanich Farmers' Institute, was in charge of the arrangements.

Ladysmith Miners Win Coderre Cup

LADYSMITH, July 30.—The citizens of Ladysmith and residents of the district were very much pleased in hearing of the success of the local ambulance team, representing the Canadian Collieries (Dunsmuir), Ltd. In the recent examination, which was carried out by Colonel Hodgetts, of Ottawa, they won the Coderre Cup, giving them the distinction of being the champion ambulance mining team of Canada.

FINE FLOWERS AT BAMBERTON SHOW

Annual Event Is Opened by Captain Ian St. Clair—Tennis Played in Afternoon

BAMBERTON, July 30.—The third annual Bamberton Flower Show was held in the Recreation Hall, Bamberton, on Wednesday. Boats were run from Tod Inlet and Moodyville at intervals during the afternoon and evening to accommodate the visitors.

Captain Ian Sinclair opened the show and congratulated the exhibitors on the excellence of the display. Honorable E. D. Barrow with friends were among those present. During the afternoon many enjoyable sets of tennis were played by members of the Social Club and friends. Afternoon tea was served on the veranda of the clubhouse by a committee of ladies.

The gardens, which were judged by Mr. E. White, were on the whole excellent and showed considerable improvement over previous years.

A dance was held in the evening, the music being supplied by an orchestra. The affair from beginning to end was an unqualified success. The judges for the events were Mrs. J. Gordon and Mr. E. White. The prize winners were:

Division A, Flowers—1, Mrs. Mottershead; 2, Mrs. V. Zellinski.

Division B, Vegetables—1, Mr. E. Bull; 2, Mr. S. Hughes.

Division C, School Children—1, Ethel Bull, freehand drawing; 2, John Barlow, wild flowers.

Division B, Domestic Science—1, Mrs. R. Baker; 2, Mrs. R. Hamilton.

Improved Sooke Road Opens Up New Delightful Drive

Journey to Jordan River Takes Motorist Through Much Beautiful and Interesting Country Past Otter Point, Muir Creek and Shirley to the Power Station.

The hard surfacing of the Sooke Road during the Spring of the year has opened up another delightful drive to the residents of Victoria and to the tourists who flock to the Coast when the Interior gets too warm for comfort. The rocky corners have been cut off and widened, and the public are realizing just what a worth-while drive it is. As the road winds around the harbor, cameras are set to work to record the beauty spots, and then comes Saseenos which is fast passing from the pioneering stage of rough lumber one-room cabins, to modern, roomy, substantial residences, with well laid-out grounds. The walls of the forest are being pushed back, and the underbrush, which not so many years ago overhung the road, is now hundreds of yards away on either side, except where the broom makes an avenue of golden glory in the early Summer as you near Sooke, one of the oldest settlements on the Island, which is now coming into its own at last.

A BEAUTIFUL DISTRICT

The natural beauties of Sooke are many, and a well organized tourist camp caters to an ever-increasing patronage, providing all comforts and conveniences for those who wish to make an extended visit. For those out for the afternoon or day, there are many shady lanes and side roads to explore, and, as Sooke is only on hour's moderate run from Victoria, many cars are finding their way there this Summer.

The American tourist and the Prairie people have a "hankering" for the seashore however, and the Victoria people, who for years have heard of "The West Coast Road," will all be interested enough to follow the road which turns off sharply to the right at Sooke Postoffice, which is about the centre of the village.

"Jordan River Road," says the sign, and thence the road leads through the settlements of Otter Point and Shirley. Sooke bridge is about halfway between Victoria and Jordan River. Farms and houses dot the countryside from Sooke to Otter Point, but most of them lie between the road and the sea, the distance between which is about a mile. This road is not tarviated, but it is a good road until Otter Point is passed a distance of seven or eight miles. Here one can see out towards the Pacific Ocean, and the Olympics show up to the best advantage it being only twelve or thirteen miles across the Strait of Juan De Fuca at this point. The next mile and a half is through the Vogel farm, in full view of the sea and a beautiful place.

A POPULAR SPOT

The handsome residence is passed, and then Tugwell Creek is reached, beloved of fisherman and picnic parties, a lovely shady creek, but not much space free from brush. Then on a mile to Muir Creek, which by a curious chance is in the Malahat District, its mouth being at the apex of the V-shaped E. & N. Railway belt. Here there is a natural clearing of a few acres and each Summer recently has seen an increasing number of campers and family parties. Three cool springs within a few hundred yards of the creek provide ample water, the creek itself being a tidal river for about half a mile, navigable for about half that distance for a small launch at high or medium tide, and for the remainder for an ordinary boat. It averages about a hundred yards in width, but at the mouth only about fifty feet.

The "riffles" are delightful places these days. The tide goes out in the mornings and the stones get warm in in the hot sunshine, so that when the tide comes up early in the afternoons, the kiddies can splash around to their hearts' content in the warmed water and much safer than on the ordinary sharply deepening waters of the seashore or lake.

Time and again one hears "We first came to have a look around for the day," and in a few days back they come with full camping equipment to remain for the rest of the holidays. A hundred yards or so over the flower starred "flat" and they are on the beach for a salt water bathe or to study sea-life at low water, or across the creek to a sandstone beach and the fossil beds with their treasures of prehistoric remains of the cousins of the dugongs and manatees and all kinds of curly shell fish and green beetles, samples of which are eagerly welcomed by the Smithsonian Institute at Washington, D.C.

INTERKSTING GEOLOGY

Rev. Robert Connell, Vancouver Island authority on geological formations and animal and plant life, predicts an interesting future for them, when the tap-tap of the hammers of professors and students will seek to wrest many ancient secrets from their sandstone resting places.

The road seems to be betting quite hilly now and narrower, and the overhanging bushes shut off the view on the corners, of which there are many, so we will hie back to Victoria and leave Shirley and Jordon River for our next instalment of West Coast Road scenery.

SOOKE SALE OF WORK

SOOKE, July 30.—A successful sale of work was held in Sooke Hall, on Friday evening under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid of Knox Presbyterian Church. The numerous stalls were soon cleared by the large crowd of willing purchasers. The ladies in charge were the following: Mrs. R. J. Mugford, Mrs. Kohout and Mrs. Reid, art needlework; Mrs. Norton and Misses A. Milne and E. Phillips, ice cream and candy; Mrs. Acreman and Mrs. J. S. Muir, refreshments; Miss Margaret Horne, fish pond. The weight of a cake was correctly guessed by Mrs. Robillard as three pounds, three ounces. The large salmon, donated by the Sooke Harbour Fishing Company, was won by Messrs. B. Mugford and D. Lidstone, each of whom guessed the correct weight.

Babe Ruth "Plays" In Vocafilm Record

Babe Ruth was invited by David R. Hochreich, president of Vocafilm Corporation of America, to be one of the guests of honor when the Vocafilm world premiere takes place at the Longacre Theatre, New York. But the Babe had to leave with the Yankees on their Western trip and will not be back in time for the opening. Nevertheless the "King of Swat" will be represented at the opening because he made a Vocafilm introduction, "telling the folks out front" what a lot of fun he had when he made "Babe Comes Home" out in Los Angeles.

Standing out in sharp contrast to the skyline, the silhouette of a man leaned over the rustic bridge.

His musings were interrupted by the approach of a stranger.

"Hallos" exclaimed the newcomer. "What are you doing?"

The other swung round uncertainly. "You're just in time," he murmured. "Look! What's that?"

"The river, of course," was the answer.

"Yes, I can see that. But what's that shining in the water?"

"The moon!"

A look of sheer astonishment spread over the other man's face.

"Then," he said, slowly, "if that's the moon down there, what are we doin' up here?"

Helen—"It took Jack twenty-five lesson to teach me to swim."

Sybil—"The cad! He taught me in six!"—Mink.

The Conservatives are making every endeavor to have the picnic the event of the season.

ALPINE CLUB VISIT ISLAND BEAUTY SPOT

Through Generosity of Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Warren, Members Explore Firwood Estate, Sooke

Throught the generosity of Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Warren, the Victoria section of the Alpine Club of Canada and some members of the Natural History Society spent several interesting hours yesterday afternoon exploring some of the fascinating trails over Firwood Farm, Sooke Harbor, one of the most extensive and beautiful estates on the Island.

The expedition, numbering twenty-eight persons, left the city about 1:15 o'clock, and on arrival at Firwood was received by Mr. and Mrs. Warren. The former conducted one group up Red Flag Mountain, which commands a magnificent view of the Sooke Harbor and surrounding country. In gaining the summit, the hikers incidentally traversed some of the most beautiful uplands of the district. One of the trails led through a forest of giant firs and cedar, one of the very few areas on the southern part of the Island which has apparently never been touched by forest fire. Although it is late in the season to collect botanical specimens, several varieties of ferns and late wild flowers were found. Several deer were seen in the course of the afternoon, finding sanctuary here.

The geologic interest of the district appealed especially to other members, and the group conducted by Miss Warren, which confined its explorations to the lower terrain, was particularly interested in the historic associations of the harbor and in various points indicated off shore, including the rocks where seal come up regularly to sun themselves.

The groups returned to the rendezvous shortly after 5 o'clock, enjoying an al fresco tea while comparing notes on the afternoon. Before starting back to the city a cordial vote of thanks was passed to Mr. and Mrs. Warren, and their daughter, for their hospitality.

Next month's expedition, under club auspices, will be to Mount Maguire.

NOT SINGING TONIGHT

Owing to having been unexpectedly called to Vancouver, Mr. Ivor Roberts will be unable to sing at the evening service at the Metropolitan Church. The solo in the anthem, "Seek Ye the Lord," will be taken by Mr. Nancarrow, and the soprano solo, "God's Garden" (Lambert), will be sung by Mrs. Alfred H. Adams, who has only recently joined

2 DEATHS

ALEXANDER—On Friday, July 29, 1927, at his late residence, 1277 St. David Street, Oak Bay, John Stephen Travers Alexander, aged sixty-five years.

The remains are reposing at Hayward's B.C. Funeral Chapel, from where the funeral will take place on Tuesday afternoon, at 2 o'clock, proceeding to Christ Church Cathedral, where service will be held at 2.15. Rev. H. T. Archbold will conduct the service. Interment will be made at Royal Oak Burial Park.

MILLER—On the 30th inst., at New Westminster, there passed away Mrs. Margaret Miller, widow of the late James Miller, of Strawberry Vale, Saanich. She is survived by one daughter, Mrs. Arthur Longland; a grandson, Leslie Longland, of Strawberry Vale; three sisters and two brothers.

Funeral arrangements will be announced later.

3 MARRIAGES

DALK-JOHNSON - CONOLLY—At St. James' Church, Montreal, June 29th, Herbert Walter Dale-Johnson, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. W. Dale-Johnson, of 1346 Harrison St., Victoria, B.C., and Mary Alice, eldest daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Connolly, of Liverpool, England.

4 CARDS OF THANKS

Mr. Walter Shaddick and the Painter family wish to thank the many friends for their sympathy both written and spoken, and also for the many beautiful floral tributes sent during their recent sad bereavement.

Mrs. Alexander Bruce and relatives wish to express their heartfelt thanks to all those who kindly sent words of sympathy and flowers in her sad bereavement, also to those who so untiringly aided in the search for her loving husband.

5 IN MEMORIAM

DAVIS—In memory of my son, Norman Davis, who died on his 30th birthday, 28th July, 1914. Ever remembered and regretted by his mother, Mrs. Andrew Davis, 1217 Johnson Street, Victoria.

God takes them from our hands
(That seemed but made to cling)
He sets them far away, in the shades
Of his far-stretching wing.
And bids us pray for them
With a deep and yearning thrill
With a passionate power we had not known
When they were with us still.

—Mrs. Andrew Davis.

FISH—In loving memory of George Fish, who passed away July 31st, 1926.

Dearer to memory than words can tell
Are the thoughts of you I loved so well;
Your memory is as fresh today
As the hour you passed away.

Inserted by his loving wife.

ADVANCE SHIFTS TO RAIL STOCKS

MANY INDUSTRIALS ALSO ATTAIN NEW PEAKS—OTHERS LOSE GROUND

Bond Market Shows Activity—Rail and Telephone Debentures Score Good Gains

NEW YORK, July 30.—Switching of speculative interest from the industrials to rails featured the resumption of the upward movement in today's stock market.

Pennsylvania moved up more than a point to 66¼, the highest level since 1910. New peak prices were attained by Atchison, Erie common, Great Northern preferred, Southern Pacific, Union Pacific and Northern Pacific. Steel common closed ⅛ higher at 136, after fluctuating within a range of two points.

General Motors closed unchanged at 226½ after selling between 225½ and 227¾. Dupont closed three points lower at 287.

Hudson Motors went up more than three points to a new 1927 top at 89¾. Among the many other issues to reach new high ground were Allied Chemical, American Steel & Foundry, Consolidated Gas, Cuyamel Fruit, International Harvester, F. G. Shattuck, Timken Roller Bearing, and Warren Brothers. Atlantic Refining had a gain of more than three points. Selling pressure was most effective against Radio Corporation, Freeport, Texas, and Bayuk Cigars.

Firmness continued to rule the bond market. Chesapeake Corporation 5's, moved within a fraction of their high record price. Oregon Short Line refunding 4's, and Frisco "Income" 6's, were also attractive. Erie "D" 4's, jumped three points. International Telephone debenture 4½'s, sold as high as 92¾, the year's best figure, and Third Avenue Adjustment 5's, were again active round their 1927 top. Industrial liens were quiet.

DRAMATIC RISE IN CASH OATS

Price of July Oats Advances More Than 18 Cents Per Bushel as Shorts Rush Frantically to Cover

CASH WHEAT ALSO FLURRIES UPWARD

WINNIPEG, July 30.—A sensational advance of 18⅜ cents in the price of July oats featured the close of the cash month on the Winnipeg grain exchange today and produced scenes of wildest excitement.

Belated buying by shorts brought about the almost unprecedented rise. Holders of July oats held on to supplies until the close of the session. Frantic shorts fought to meet their commitments and many were near exhaustion from the ordeal.

July wheat also experienced an upward flurry to close 3⅞ cents above yesterday's finish at 163¾. Cash barley gained 3¼ cents. Trading in other positions was relatively quiet.

FINANCIAL HOUSE ADOPTS NEW NAME

R. P. Clark & Co., Ltd., to Be Known as Branson, Brown & Co., Ltd.

MR. C. L. H. BRANSON

Announcement is made that from August 1, the Victoria, B.C., financial house, R. P. Clark & Co., Ltd., will change the firm's name to Branson, Brown & Co., Ltd.

Mr. C. L. H. Branson, president of the firm, is an old London Stock Exchange man with many years' experience in Mexico with Lord Cowdray. He entered into partnership with General R. P. Clark in Victoria in the year 1921. Mr. Branson is a member of the Winnipeg Grain Exchange, also the Vancouver Stock Exchange and many other financial organizations. The firm are the Victoria correspondents of Messrs. Logan & Bryan, of New York, and enjoy all the private wire privileges of that well known New York brokerage house.

Mr. Charles E. Brown, vice-president, has been with the firm since its inception and is a well-known financial authority in the city of Victoria, where his father, Mr. P. R. Brown, organized and administered the real estate firm of P. R. Brown & Company.

Mr. W. J. Gurney, secretary, is a well known man both in Victoria and Ontario, having occupied the position of City Treasurer of Port Arthur, for a number of years.

Mr. C. A. Melville, another partner, who has charge of the B. C. Stock Department, is an old member of the Vancouver Stock Exchange, and has the reputation of being very well read on all British Columbia enterprises.

The bond department staff enjoy the honor of having both Major A. E. Christie, at one time manager of the Union Bank and the Royal Financial Corporation of this city, and Major Allan Lyons, M.P.P., popular local member of the Provincial Legislature.

Some months back the heads of this firm purchased from General R. P. Clark his entire interests in the firm, and consequently the change of name.

Messrs. Branson, Brown & Co., Ltd., have a highly efficient staff of twenty-four employees, and have grown considerably during the last few years on account of the very conservative lines adopted by the executives of the firm.

Winnipeg Grain Letter

(Supplied by R. P. Clark & Co., Ltd.)

WINNIPEG, July 30.—The wheat market was a little firmer today, with general evening up by longs and shorts in the passing cash month, and a little short covering in the new crop futures over the two days holidays. Trade volume was not particularly large and was mostly local. The July month passed away firm, but there were no fireworks. Liverpool closed 1¾ up to ⅜ lower, considerably stronger than expected, considering the decline on this side yesterday. Broomhall reported a little better demand for wheat, but that wheat cutting was now in full swing over a large part of continental Europe. Export business from North America continues very moderate and world shipments this week were estimated to be around 11,000,000 bushels, which will probably show another sharp decrease on passage stocks. The United States visible supply is expected to show a big increase Monday. The Free Press crop report this morning showed that conditions throughout Western Canada were very promising, with the crops making excellent progress, but still late. The report was construed as bearish but was as the trade expected, although rust infection was reported as very slight. Private reports of Spring wheat conditions in the United States are due Monday. Canada has now reached the end of the 1927 crop year, the farmers have marketed 340,000,000 bushels, showing the crop to have been a little larger than the official estimates made earlier in the season. After allowing for reasonable carryover the total Canadian wheat supply remaining as a surplus aggregates around 35,000,000 bushels. We look for the market to work lower next week and advise sales on all bulges.

Coarse Grains: The feature of these markets today was the evident corner in July oats. Supplies are said to be in the hands of two interests who were refusing to sell, and belated shorts were forced to bid prices up in order to get their requirements. July oats finally closed eighteen cents higher for today, while the deferred futures were unchanged.

Flax: Continues dull with no feature, there were no shorts to cover and final figures were lower.

To the Investor

It seems to be quite generally agreed that the average citizen understands investment matters today more thoroughly than in years past. This has been made possible by the educational work conducted by many legitimate financial agencies and others, but much has yet to be accomplished before the flagrant offences, so common even today, are entirely forgotten. Too often the investor is lamentably ignorant as to how to secure reliable information by which to distinguish between what is an honest proposition and what is a doubtful one. The reliable investment house, by giving free advice and service in these matters, serves the community equally with the family physician—for each is a doctor in his own line.

The Time to Buy

The Summer recession in the Bond and Stock Market does not reflect any falling off in the security of the issues in question, but is an indication that during this season there is comparatively little interest in financial matters.

The law of supply and demand controls the price of securities. Therefore, the careful investor takes advantage of this temporary slump to buy issues which are selling out of line.

We offer and recommend several such securities.

Our list may be had on request.

AMERICAN FURRIER DISCUSSES TRADE

Eastern Publication Comments on Studies of Local Business Man as Designer

MR. LAURIE B. ALEXANDER

(The following article appeared in the August number of the American Furrier, written by Henry W. Rosley, the fashion editor of that publication):

How often it is that we hear it said of this or that person whose success in life is being discussed: It was largely "luck" that "got him there." Just what role does "Lady Luck" actually play in the matter of success or failure of the average person's life work? While the element of luck is not one that can be entirely disregarded or denied, there can be no doubt it plays but a very secondary part. When Napoleon claimed that the divine support is "always on the side of the strongest battalions," he simply meant that success comes most readily to those who strive earnestly to make themselves strong and fit. It is a conviction that even luck itself comes more readily to the person who actively strives to equip himself for success, than to the one who idly waits for his luck to "change."

It is certain that the one thing essential to success in any line of human endeavor is the building of a solid foundation. Then luck is apt to be present. A builder who wishes his house to be lasting and enduring does not leave the matter to luck; he builds it of honest material upon a strong foundation. Then only an unforeseen catastrophe can destroy the house, but in the usual course of things the house will stand.

Is not the success of a furrier's business very much like that? If his fur coats are to fit properly and give satisfaction to the wearer he, too, requires the solid foundation that consists of the ability to construct a fur coat in such a manner that it will "stand up" under the wear and stress which it can reasonably be expected to withstand. Such sound fur coat construction is only possible when the furrier is familiar in every way, even to the minutest detail with the preparation of the foundation for that coat. That foundation is the pattern, and a good pattern must be based on an efficient designing system.

Young Laurie B. Alexander, who hails from British Columbia, realizing this great necessity of a full knowledge of designing, left the fur business conducted at Victoria by his aunt, Mrs. Foster, who is known all over the Dominion of Canada as proprietress of Foster's Fur Store, and went to the Mitchell Designing School in New York, where he has just completed his course. He is now returning to his home province to open a branch store of Foster's in the city of Vancouver, and states that, even while at school as a mere lad, he devoted most of his spare time to work in and around the fur business.

He said: "I came across this vast continent, prompted by the desire to study designing, for I realized that without it there could be no real success for me as a furrier. After a course of about two months at the Mitchell Designing School, I am pleased to say that I found there a method so thorough and systematic, that it enabled me to master the full designing system in this short time. I return to British Columbia with increased confidence, based on full knowledge of the principles that govern the construction of a perfect pattern, and the further and equally important knowledge of how to put a good pattern together so as to produce a well-fitting coat—one that will give proper wear and real satisfaction to my customer.

"I am glad that I came to New York and took this course in designing. I feel that, in the diploma which I have earned, that I have acquired a passport which will open to me a larger field of activity and usefulness than would have been possible without the equipment of this prerequisite in expert furriery: a reliable system of designinging."

The American Furrier utilizes this opportunity to express to Mr. Alexander and Mrs. Foster their sincere wishes for the success of the new Vancouver branch.

"Why did you stick this knife in this man?"

"I saw the police coming and had to hide it somewhere."

WHY WIVES LEAVE HOME

The peas were hard, the cabbage was tough, the steak was half cooked, and the fat was in the fire, when the hard-boiled husband arrived home. There was nothing else for it, but a whale of a row. But the alibi was a good one, and peace reigned supreme—She had got a BARGAIN.

The good ship Ss. London Merchant docked at Victoria July 7, with a job lot of merchandise purchased from the Lancashire mills by our English buying agent at a discount of 25%. This shipment includes

The Garden Week by Week

By NORMAN W. F. RANT, F.R.H.S.

Many people with gardens have been taking stock lately of what has been flowering in their borders during the last month or six weeks, and have been trying to make up their mind as to what to plant this Fall in order to improve the look of their flower beds.

The selection of tall perennials for the back of the border is sometimes a difficult matter, so it is thought opportune at this time to give a few hints on the subject.

Planning the border is largely a matter of personal taste, but there are certain principles upon which all mixed borders should be constructed. Besides careful color combinations and contrasts, a well designed border should be properly graduated, and there should be a sufficient number of tall perennials at the back so that height and character may be given to the whole undertaking. A few of the best and and most easily grown of these tall plants are as follows:

One of the earliest flowering of the tall herbaceous plants is the Delphinium, and no border can do without this stately perennial. Today there are so many varieties and types to choose from that every taste can be fully satisfied. The range of color is very great, from the darkest purple to the lightest blue and white, and now, developed in Victoria, we have one that is almost primrose yellow.

THE USEFUL LUPIN

Although the lupins are well known, gardeners do not always make the best use of them, nor do they plant the finest varieties. Some of the newer pink lupins and the buffs and fawns and clear yellows are glorious perennials and very easy to grow.

Coreopsis and gaillardias are both early-flowering perennials of inatheless golden yellow, which flower over a long period.

Peonies and poppies make a very brilliant show in the garden during the early Summer months. Duchess de Nemours is a beautiful white peony; purpurea Delasche, a deep crimson; Duchess of Teck, clear pink, and Lord Derby, a fine dark red. The Oriental poppies, Mrs. Perry, shrimp pink; Ethel Swete, soft rose; Lord Lambourne, orange scarlet, and Oriental King, crimson-scarlet, are among the very choicest.

Herbaceous phlox form another group of perennials which will succeed practically anywhere. Baron von Dedem is a brilliant orange-scarlet; Elizabeth Campbell, a pretty salmon pink with a white eye; Asia, rose-pink with a carmine eye; Europe, white with a carmine centre; Gruppenkonigin, flesh pink, late flowering, and La Fiance, a magnificent white, are among the best of a very large family.

The campanulas, or bell flowers, are graceful as well as robust in constitution. They like a sunny position in fairly rich soil. Among those which are suitable for growing in the mixed borden are: Campanula laetiflora, campanula latifolia, and campanula persicifolia and all its varieties. Campanula latifolia bears fine spikes of mauve, white and blue bell-shaped blooms; the bells of Campanula latifolia alba are pure white, while Campanula persicifolia alba is white, and Telham Beauty and Ryburgh Bells, both belonging to the latter class, are light blue in color. All these grow from three to four feet high.

Heleniums (sneezewort) and helianthus (sunflowers) provide any quantity of gold and bronze flowers in the late Summer and Fall. Heleniums autumnale, Riverton Beauty, and pumilum magnificum will smother themselves with bloom. Useful sunflowers which are not coarse in habit are: Miss Mellish, Monarch and Loddon Gold. These are all good plants for cut flowers.

The perennial asters, or Michaelmas daisies, are now such a large class that it is difficult to make a choice, but no one will go wrong by getting Climax, blue, large flowers; King of the Belians, lavender blue; St. Egwin, pink; Lil Fardell, clear pink; Nancy Ballard, rosy mauve, and Perry's White.

By growing the above-mentioned tall perennials one may have almost constant bloom in the back of the border. None of the plants named are in the least hard to grow and none are very particular as to soil or situation. Deep shade should, of course, be avoided as much as possible. All will respond with added strength and bloom to liberal treatment in the way of manure.

It is a good time now to make out a list of what one needs while these flowers are still in bloom, and one may see them in gardens and nurseries in full bloom.

FUTURE BRIGHTENS FOR SHINGLE MILL

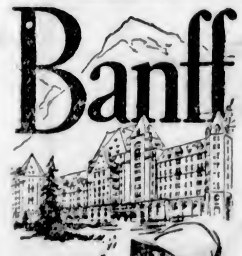

Report of Retail Lumber Business in Iowa and the Dakotas Means Much to Coast

SEATTLE, July 30.—The retail lumber business is looking better right along in Northern Iowa and the Dakotas, according to Stanley Hood, salesman in that territory for the Warren-Lamb Company at Rapid City, S.D., who is visiting Coast mills during the week.

Western red cedar shingles are gaining in popularity with the trade throughout his territory, Hood reported, and he believes that the bad days in the shingle business of the West Coast are now well behind the industry, as consumers are coming back to the better grades of Western red cedar shingles as the best roofing material available.

Retail lumber dealers, according to Hood, are not so much interested in low prices for shingles as they are in a price level that can be held from month to month. Most retailers, he believes, consider the present prices of Western red cedar at the mills as too low. The reason is that steady price such as comes when the manufacturer is making a fair profit stablizes the retailer's costs, making his business planning more certain. "Extremely low lumber and shingle prices are just as bad for the retail business as for the mill," Hood declared.
